THEME UP AND OUT

AFO The reopening of colleges for the fall semester may seem far away, during these cold days of winter. But already, faculty and administrators at the State University of New York at Stony Brook are preparing for the incoming freshman class.

Hi, everybody. This is Al Oickle. I'm with the Office of University News Services at the State University of New York, here at Stony Brook. This is the weekly program, called Here at Stony Brook.

Today I will be talking with John P. Joyce, director of student financial aid, here at Stony Brook. This is the time of year that many high school seniors are asking themselves, "Can I afford to attend college?" Jack Joyce has some answers that may be helpful. We'll hear those questions, and answers, later in the program.

The School of Allied Health Professions, here at Stony Brook, represents what may be, for some of the old-timers like myself, at least, a modern, new collection of academic programs in ~~health and medicine~~ health and medicine. In the modern medical center, as many as 125 different kinds of health-related specialists stand ready to utilize their skills and knowledge. Heading the School of Allied Health Professions, here at Stony Brook, is Dean Edmund McTernan. Dr. McTernan, I've read that more than ~~10~~ distinct categories of health professional have joined the physician and nurse on the modern ~~health~~ health care team. How many of these categories are covered at the School of Allied Health Professions?

"I'd love to go to college. But I can't afford it." That statement is fairly common around New York right now. Jack Joyce, who is the director of student financial aid at the State University of New York at Stony Brook, hears that statement often. Sometimes it is in the form of a question: "Can I afford to attend college?" How do you answer that question, Mr. Joyce?

THEME UP AND UNDER

Another "Here at Stony Brook!" has come to a close. Next week, I will be talking with Professor Don Ihde of the Department of Philosophy, here at Stony Brook. We'll be talking about how society copes with modern technology, and how this technology is breeding a new school of philosophy. I hope you'll tune us in. Until then, this is Al Oickle. So long, everybody.
