INTRO UP AND UNDER

Hi, everybody. The sound of "Pomp and Circumstance" is in the air again. That means it's graduation time on university campuses around the land. Soon, thousands of young people, and not a few who are not so young, will be leaving school with their new degrees and heading out into the world. Who are these newcomers to civilization outside education? Are they young fogies like television's Alex P. Keaton? Or glossy commercial punks like Cindy Lauper? Or perhaps the new adult generation is really given to the cult that New York magazine endlessly reports, the yuppies. Well, I'm here at the State University of New York at Stony Brook to talk today with two young ~~women~~ who are burdened with that lightest of all student titles, the seniors. Mitchell Horowitz is editor-in-chief of the student-run community newspaper called Statesman. You don't look like any of the stereotypes I just mentioned, Mitch.

We'll pause for a moment. When we return, I'll be talking with our student panel about what they expect from the world when they graduate, and what they plan to contribute. I hope you'll stay with us.

BRIDGE MUSIC UP AND UNDER

Hi. I'm Al Dickle. I'm talking with a panel of seniors at the State University of New York at Stony Brook. They will be leaving with their degrees soon, and I'm curious, as perhaps the waiting world is, to learn what it is they most want from that world. Mitch?

INTERVIEW STUDENTS

- Wages: $3.35 minimum, $2-million/yr for Ralph Sampson
- Family: test-tube pregnancies, surrogate mothers
- Equality: gender, race
- What do they hope to contribute?

PROMO - Do not use after 5:55 p.m. Tuesday, May 12, 1987

Hi, everybody. This is Al Dickle. You can hear me every Tuesday at 6 p.m. on my program, called Conversations Unlimited. This week I'll be talking with college seniors who are about to join that big, often frightening world off campus. The seniors will tell us what they expect from the world, and what they think they can contribute. Give us a listen, won't you? Conversations Unlimited. Tuesday, 6 in the evening on FM 90.1 - WUSB.
