5. Graduate Grant Writing Workshop

Today's economic climate is just one example of how it is becoming increasingly important for those in graduate degree programs to have a working knowledge of the grant process. This workshop will feature two Stony Brook faculty members: Michael Hadjiargyrou, Associate Professor of Biomedical Engineering, Genetics, and Orthopaedics and Associate Vice President for Research and Robert Crease, Chairman of the Department of Philosophy. Also represented on the panel will be a member of the Research Foundation and three graduate fellows who have been successful in obtaining either National Science Foundation or Fulbright Grants. The workshop is designed to provide the graduate students an overview of the grant process and a forum to ask and discuss the various components that are involved in creating a successful proposal. Both the Sciences and Humanities will be discussed and all are encouraged to attend. Tuesday, April 20 at 2pm in SAC 303

11. CS Distinguished Lecture Series: BitBlaze: Computer Security via Binary Analysis, Dawn Song, UC Berkeley.

Time: Friday, April 23, 2010, 2:15pm at CEWIT 200

The BitBlaze project focuses on building a unified binary program analysis platform and using it to provide novel solutions to computersecurity problems. The binary analysis platform provides an extensiblearchitecture and a broad range of static analysis, dynamic analysis,and program verification capabilities, all of which operate directlyon compiled binaries. These capabilities enable BitBlaze to take apowerful, principled approach to security that focuses on identifying the underlying root causes of security vulnerabilities. BitBlaze has been applied successfully to several novel security applications,including patch-based exploit generation, automatic generation ofvulnerability signatures for defense, model extraction from webbrowsers for vulnerability discovery, and in-depth malware analysis.

6. Film: Voices from El-Sayed

In an Israeli town where many cannot hear, Salim defies tradition by allowing his deaf son to receive a cochlear implant. This documentary traces the boy's adjustment to a life of sound and the varied reactions of his neighbors. With an artful eye, director Oded Adomi Leshem offers a fascinating glimpse into this close-knit Bedouin village, where the world's largest deaf community integrates seamlessly into daily life. (75 min., Arabic/Hebrew with English subtitles, 2008)
