3. SBU/BNL Shuttle Service Expanded

In 2003 the Office of Brookhaven Laboratory Affairs with the Vice President for Research and the Graduate School instituted a van service between Stony Brook University and Brookhaven National Laboratory. Initially this service ran twice daily and provided seats for 12 passengers. In the fall of 2004 service was expanded to run three times daily.

To accommodate the increasing ridership of this service, beginning on Friday, April 1, 2005 service to/from SBU and BNL will be provided by Coastal Charter Services which will run a 24 passenger mini-bus.

The schedule will continue with three round trips per day, the schedule of service can be found on the Vice President for Brookhaven Affairs Website.

9. Lecture by: Sara Ahmed, Goldsmiths College University of London Wednesday, April 6 at 4:30 pm, Humanities Institute, Library E4340

"Orientations: Towards a Queer Phenomenology" -- In this paper, Ahmed asks how bodies are "orientated," or how bodies take shape through being directed in some ways rather than others. Such orientations, it suggests, are not "casual," but are produced through the repetition of actions over time, which puts some objects 'in reach', as being available at home. The paper offer a phenomenological approach to the very question of what it means to "orient" oneself sexually towards some objects (and not others), and attends to how this bodily direction 'towards' such objects affects how bodies inhabit spaces, and how spaces inhabit bodies.

5. The Music for Peace Project: Stony Brook, April 8-10 A festival of music, film, and ideas at Stony Brook University

Open to the entire community, The Music for Peace Project: Stony Brook will include a diverse array of world music concerts, lectures, and films dedicated to peace and social justice. The local Music for Peace Project: Stony Brook is the keystone to the international Music for Peace Project, a global network of concerts for peace which will take place during the weekend of April 8-10 around the world. The Music for Peace Project was conceived of, and is organized by, the Stony Brook student organization called The Musicians' Alliance for Peace. Last year, during the first annual Music for Peace Project, the Musicians' Alliance for Peace coordinated 73 concerts in 13 countries during three days, all calling for peace. The Music for Peace Project promotes and supports an international, grassroots, non-partisan call for peace by musicians around the world.

Energize your day with a meditation, and a Reiki healing treatment.

Reiki (pronounced ray-key) is an ancient Tibetan healing art that dates back nearly three thousand years. It is a hands-on method that uses Universal Energy to heal and return to balance elements of the body, mind and spirit. It is not a religion, nor does it require a belief system to work. It is a powerful yet gentle healing technique.

FEES: $5.00

Space is limited to 25 participants

Pre-registration required. To register call Allison Milano 632-7263

Kundalini Yoga is the "yoga of awareness" and is the most ancient of all yoga. It's sometimes called the efficient yoga as it combines chants, breath, exercise, relaxation and meditation for a complete workout. It is a great way to recharge the body as it stimulates the nervous and immune systems, improves flexibility and strength, and centers the mind and opens the spirit. From your very first class, you'll start reaping the rewards which include relief from back pain, stress, addiction, depression, insomnia and weight control.
