8. Herstory Writers Workshop

Sunday, March 2, 2008, 10am to 3:30pm at Wang Center Chapel

How might you tell your own story?

If you had to imagine a possible page one for a story about your own life, what might that opening moment be? These are the questions that Herstory Writers Workshop founder Erika Duncan asks each new participant in this unique writing workshop that helps women develop the tools and techniques to reshape their very intimate experiences into a form that will be meaningful to a stranger-reader.

This program is FREE and open to the public.

All women are invited to participate, regardless of their educational background or previous writing experience. First-time writers are welcome and encouraged to attend.

For further information or to register contact Herstory Writers Workshop at 631-676-7395

1. Attention all Stony Brook Departments: Do you need student volunteers?

Do you need student volunteers? Many of our students are looking to give back to the campus community and can be matched to your department to help out with various projects/events on a short-term or long-term basis. Our goal is to create a list of departments on campus that will be able to offer students volunteer opportunities. To respond, or for answers to inquiries, please contact: Rachel Levy, VISTA Coordinator, Career Center at raclevy@notes.cc.sunysb.edu or at 631-632-6812.
