4. Distinguished Lecture Series in Computer Science, Friday, Oct 29, 2:30. Prof. Erik Demaine, MIT: "Origami Robots and Star Trek Replicators"

Distinguished Lecture Series in Computer Science, Friday, Oct 29, 2:30-3:30, in CEWIT 200, featuring world renown Prof. Erik Demaine, of MIT (<http://erikdemaine.org/>) "Origami Robots and Star Trek Replicators"

Science fiction is a great inspiration for science. How can we build reconfigurable robots like Transformers or Terminator 2? How can we build replicators that mass-produce a given shape at the nano scale? Recently we've been exploring possible answers to these questions through computational geometry.

One approach to reconfigurable robots, based on computational origami design, is to build a sheet of material that can fold itself into desired shapes.

Going down to the nano scale, we need to work with much simpler parts, actuated by Brownian motion, van der Waal forces, etc.

I will describe the algorithms and geometry underlying all of these ideas, as well as our early attempts at implementing them in practice.

What does home mean for Americans of Asian descent? Hip hop duo Magnetic North teams with New York City's own Taiyo Ba and comedian Tina Kim seek to answer this question through comedy hip hop and spoken word. Magnetic North and Taiyo Na explore the Asian American experience through their own version of hip hop that emphasizes organic beats, irresistible melodic hooks, clean timbers and engagingly rhythmic vocal performances while comedian Tina Kim skewers the internet, dating culture, and Asian and female stereotypes through hilarious personal narratives.

6. Films: Pepot Artista preceded by the short film Superfan

Pepot Artista

The culmination of a forty-year-old dream, famed Filipino cinematographer, screenwriter, and director Clodualdo "Doy" del Mundo brings us Pepot Artista. Set in the 1970s, Pepot Artista is a comedy-musical about a poverty stricken ten-year-old boy whose dream is to become a movie star.

Superfan

This colorful docu-drama focuses on Mandy Diaz, the most obsessed and number one Superfan of Nora Aunor, the multi-awarded Filipino actress, singer and producer. If Aunor had a movie out, Diaz would be the first to watch it. Even in his deathbed, Diaz forbade his friends from burying him if Aunor did not visit his coffin.

Discussion with Nerissa S. Balce, PhD, Asian and Asian American Studies Department at Stony Brook. Free admission

7. Film: India Untouched

Human rights activist and documentarian Stalin K.'s film India Untouched makes it impossible for anyone in India to deny that Untouchability is still practiced today in India. Based on four years of traveling the length and breadth of India, the film exposes, in what is perhaps the deepest exploration of the topic ever undertaken on film, the continuation of caste practices and Untouchability in Sikhism, Christianity and Islam, amongst the Communist in Kerala and within some of India's most revered academic and professional institutions.

Discussion with Dr. SN Sridhar, Asian and Asian American Studies Department at Stony Brook. Free for students, $5 for all others. Part of the Port Jefferson Documentary Series by Greater Port Jefferson-Northern Brookhaven Arts Council.
