Student Stabbed On Path By Union

By Amelia Sheldon

A student received five stitches at University Hospital after being stabbed behind the Stony Brook Student Union shortly after midnight Thursday night, according to Sue Riseling, associate director of Public Safety. No arrests were made in conjunction with the incident.

According to information given to public safety officers by the victim, the attack occurred as follows: The victim, a white, male, resident student, was walking with a friend on the wood chip path behind the union when a group of five to seven black males passed them going toward the union. The victim said to his friend in conversation, "He talks s---." One of the members of the passing group said, "Are you talking to me?" The victim said, "No" and continued walking. The person persisted, "Do you want trouble." The victim responded, "No", and continued to walk. The victim then felt a sharp pain in his back and realized he had been stabbed.

The incident is not being considered a racially motivated one because neither the victim nor his friend felt that there was any bias-related comments or innuendos made during the incident, said Riseling.

A woman who witnessed the event called Public Safety anonymously and told them someone needed medical attention. The Public Safety dispatcher sent two public safety officers and a lieutenant stationed in the union to respond to the call and got back on the line with the witness. She then said, the person had been stabbed and someone in the group said they were going to get their guns, according to Riseling.

If this information about a knife and possible guns had been given in the first part of the conversation between the witness and the dispatcher, Suffolk County Police would have been called in to respond, said Riseling. As it happened, public safety officers treated the victim with first aid on the scene and transported him to University Hospital.

While the victim was being treated, a group matching the description of which the assailant was a part was also in the emergency room and one was being treated for a knife wound, according to Riseling. When the group left, the public safety officers got the license plate number which they are going to follow up on, she said.

"The problem with this situation was that the officers were stuck because they were unarmed...you don't go into a situation where you know you are at a disadvantage, said Riseling.

Xiaopo Huang

Life In China Told By Huang

By Sylvia Lee

Xiaopo Huang, the former Deputy Director of the Beijing National Press Club, described the Tiananmen Square incident last May as "history repeating itself." In her speech, "Beijing in Crisis: A Historical Perspective," she addressed this issue to about 300 people in the recital hall at the Staller Center for the Arts last Thursday night as a part of the university's distinguished lecture series.

By providing her own personal account of growing up and working in communist China, Huang hoped to give Americans "a chance to learn about the Chinese struggle for democracy." She criticized the situation of Chinese people living in a world where silence and oppression is a way of life and believes very few events in the world can compare to China's hardship. "It is very painful to see a mass-scale demonstration movement fade overnight. Most Chinese peasants still today don't really know what happened in Tiananmen Square," said Huang.

Born in Woo Han, China in 1962, Huang became disillusioned with the corruption of the Chinese government as a young child. Chinese society was never equal and social classes were distinct. She felt as if she was taught by the Chinese government "the way the world ought to be, not how it was actually."

Huang was inspired by a documentary clip she saw as a young girl of Chairman Mao and his young female translator meeting with foreign dignitaries. She believed working in the government and having an impact in it would be an exciting experience.

Though she could not attend school for four and a half years while she was forced to live in the countryside after Mao disbanded the Red Guard, a political youth organization formed during the Cultural Revolution. Huang was admitted to the foreign language department of Woo Han University and graduated in 1974.

After graduation, she landed her first job as an English translator for the Boo Bei provincial foreign affairs office. In 1979, she became a translator for a Chinese government delegation. It was her first opportunity to see the Western world. Her life and her professional career was intertwined with social transformation and reform in China. Huang felt her "duty was to bring China back to the international community."

Huang left her job post in 1983 to work for the Beijing National Press Club, the only national journalist organization in China. Her duties was to organize national press conferences of newsbreaking stories, a job that proved difficult and frustrating for her. In working with the press and government, she had to "do and say many things" which she did not want to. Since the Press Club was open to government and party control, many times the Chinese people would not believe the Press Club.

Her departure from the Press Club formed a difficult conflict within her; she believed her country needed people like herself for it to work, yet she felt somewhat relieved that finally "nobody is looking over my shoulder."

Huang referred to the national uprising in Tiananmen as another intellectual protest ending in tragedy. The same sense of frustration and disillusionment from her parent's generation to today's student generation was prevalent, but the "ideas of communism and party had no gravitational force that once held China together like those of the Cultural

Student Arrested May File Charges For Brutality

By John Santiago

One of three men arrested in the September 28, Kelly Quad incident, Michael Maresca, is contemplating filing a suit against the Department of Public Safety for police brutality because of treatment he received that evening.

Maresca said he and his friends, Christopher J. Delise and William J. Flynn, were wrongfully arrested and he was harassed and beaten by Public Safety officers. Sue Riseling, Associate Director of Public Safety, denied Maresca's allegations and said that Public Safety stands by its initial report.

According to Riseling, the incident occurred when three officers in plain clothes responded to a noise complaint call in Kelly A, where an outside party was being held and alcohol served. The situation grew into an all-out brawl when members of the group refused to take the party inside at the officers' request. At that point, approximately 15 people attacked the three officers, as well as the four uniformed officers who arrived on the site, said Riseling.

In the ensuing confrontation, which included a chase to the Old H parking lot, seven officers were injured and three men, two of them Stony Brook students, were arrested, Riseling said.

Maresca said that he, Delise, and Flynn got involved in the incident after it was already underway when the three stopped by Kelly Quad on their way to the End of the Bridge.

"When we came by Kelly there was already something going on," said Maresca, "There was just a bunch of guys and it looked like something was going to happen, but there was no pushing and no punching, just a lot of talk going back and forth."

He also said there was no party going on. "I think there was just people watching, that is why they think it was a big party, because people were coming outside to watch."

The three then stepped off to the side to observe and, "Before I knew it, two guys had one guy against the wall and the third guy was hitting him in the chest with a club."

According to Maresca, he did not know that the three men scuffling with the individual were plain clothes officers. The officers, however, did identify themselves when they first arrived at the scene, said Riseling, which was before Maresca, Delise, and Flynn got there.

Compiled From The College Press Service

Attacks On Minorities Take Center Stage

Ten months ago, vandals broke into and defaced the Jewish student Union office at the State University of New York at Binghamton, touching off rallies, sit-ins, and worries that anti-Semitism was rising on American campuses.

On September 13, state police charged the person they think wrecked the JSU office: then-JSU President James Oppenheim.

"I can't even find the word for it, it's so hurtful," Oppenheim said shortly after the Nov. 9, 1988 incident, in which anti-Semitic graffiti and swastikas were painted on his office walls.

Oppenheim, now a senior at SUNY Binghamton, pleaded not guilty on September 21 in Vestal Town Court to misdemeanor charges of falsely reporting an incident and criminal mischief.

He refused comment.

Campus officials said they wanted to withhold judgement until after Oppenheim's trial. "The atmosphere is calm," said Raymond Dye, Vice President for campus affairs at SUNY Binghamton.

JSU officers also are withholding comment because "This news came as a complete surprise to us," said JSU advisor Shalom Shoer.

Other campuses have been disrupted by staged attacks on minorities. In April, 1987, Tufts University officials formally charged a student with making up a story that he had been dragged behind a campus by "three of four white males" who beat him and called him "nigger-lover," "Jew boy," and "Pinko." The student subsequently sued the university, and the case is still in litigation.

In 1979, Amherst College officials determined a black student had been the one who burned a cross on the lawn in front of a black residence hall.

The "beating" and "cross burning" both provoked rallies, accusations and tortured self-examinations of college policies.

At SUNY Binghamton, the trashing of the JSU office occurred on the 50th anniversary of the "Kristallnacht" - the "night of broken glass" - in which Nazi sympathizers rampaged through Germany and Austria, killing scores of Jews, destroying Jews' property and setting more than 1,000 synagogues ablaze.

Historians often cite Kristallnacht as the beginning of the Holocaust.

Soon after the JSU vandalism, almost 1,100 people attended two rallies to condemn the incident.

And at the end of November, the JSU, with Oppenheim in the lead, the Black Student Union and the Gay People's Union, stormed the administration building to demand equal treatment and opportunity on campus. The 36-hour sit-in ended after administrators promised to meet some of their demands.

Oppenheim became a visible figure on campus, organizing a number of subsequent rallies.

Polity: Money Pools and Poll Booth Watchers

By Amy Eisenman

At the Polity Senate meeting held Wednesday, Dan Slepian, Vice President of the Polity Senate raised the idea of Polity forming a joint account with Student Union and Activities in the Polity Senate meeting Wednesday. Also, Election Board Chairman Bill Burke proposed cutting the number of poll watchers for Polity elections. No motions were passed.

Slepian took the floor first and said a committee that would be in charge of money for clubs and activities was needed. Presently, there is no money from Student Union and Activities to subsidize room rentals for events such as Tokyo Joe's, according to Slepian, adding that Polity pays the Student Union and Activities $2,000 to rent the Ballroom for Tokyo Joe's.

The students, since they are putting so much money into Student Union and Activities, should have a say in how that money is spent, according to Slepian.

While Student Union Activities is run by the administration, students cannot feel that they have control of the funds.

"In the 1988-89 year," said Slepian, "we payed them $10,400 just for the rental of rooms."

Slepian proposed that the funds for this new committee would come if students vote "yes" vote on the May referendum. On the referendum for the additional fees for athletics, Slepian asked students to consider lowering the athletics fee and filling it with that same amount for the Union Activities Committee. Slepian introduced the proposal written; no votes or decisions have been made.

Bill Burke, Election Board Chairman, discussed the problem of the Election Board having to watch the poll watchers. Burke said that the poll watchers frequently don't show up, and that it is hard to keep track of them because there are so many of them. When poll watchers don't show up, there is nobody to take your vote, and Election Board members have to take their place without pay, said Burke.

Burke told the Senate that a poll watcher makes $3.50 an hour, and usually works from two to three hours at a station. Polls are open from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m.

"Maybe if we increase their salaries," said Burke, "poll watchers would be more motivated to show up." He suggested a minimum amount of poll watchers to lessen the strain of the Election Board and to save money formerly wasted on absentee watchers.

Burke's proposal did not pass; polity senators argued that there were not enough polling stations.

For example, Glenn Magpantay of Irving college responded, "Everybody should be equally accessible," and that if the number of polling stations were reduced, the situation would become less democratic.

Revolution and Mao."

According to Huang, the recent pro-democracy movement in China is the most historical and fundamental event in the history of contemporary China. It demonstrated that "there is something fundamentally wrong in our society."

Huang identified the search for democracy in China with the Western search for democratic ideals. China looked to Western values for answers to China's modernization. However, when those "Western values were practiced, they proved inadequate. We must bear in mind China is a very poor, backward country. On these basic Chinese qualities we cannot expect the Chinese to play the Western game."

When Maresca saw what he thought were three men beating on another man, he ran over and grabbed the man with the club from behind and pulled him off, Maresca said.

"Then he took the club and it looked like he was going to jab me in the stomach, so I stepped back. At that instant somebody went crazy with mace," said Maresca, adding that he backed away when he was sprayed with mace, and noticed another scuffle and more people gathering to witness the incident.

"Not until I stepped back a little bit, and after I had mace on me, did I realize that they were Public Safety because [one of the officers] was lying on the ground," said Maresca. "Then someone was yelling, 'Officer down, Officer down.'"

He, Delise and Flynn they stood at the scene for a while and then walked over to the old H Parking Lot, where the officers stopped and questioned them, saying that Delise matched the description of a person who was involved in the incident, said Maresca.

While some of the officers were talking to Flynn and Delise, another officer approached Maresca and started an amiable conversation because he thought he recognized Maresca from high school, said Maresca. Afterwards, when the three were gathered together with the officers, he explained to one of the officers that he had no idea what was going on and was just trying to break up a fight.

One of the officers then said to the other officers, "No need for trouble. These guys are okay," according to Maresca.

Maresca said he was surprised when, at the moment, one of the female officers tried to handcuff him. Instinctively, he said, he backed off and started to run.

"I just ran about 50 feet, I stopped, then I turned around and I was tackled. I must have said about six times, 'I'm not resisting, I'm not resisting.'" This was when the abuse started, said Maresca.

"I was thrown to the ground and there was a couple of guys on me," said Maresca. "One guy took my arm, twisted it to the side so my face was in the dirt. Another guy stepped on my face, so my face was in the dirt. Another guy grabbed my foot and twisted it to make sure I wasn't going anywhere." All the while, Maresca said he was telling the officers that he was not resisting arrest.

Then, he said, he was struck over the head with a club. "I got hit twice in the back and once in the back of my leg. Then

I was cuffed in the worse possible way."

Once he was taken into custody, Maresca said he was not allowed to use the bathroom or call his lawyer until he was taken to University Hospital. He said he requested to be taken to the hospital because of back neck pains, and because of the cut on his head, which he said he suffered when he was struck by the club.

Maresca was treated for the head injury, although no stitches were given because by the time he reached the hospital the injury was swollen, he said. X-rays were taken of his back and neck.

In response to Maresca, Riseling said that if Maresca were struck in the head with a night stick, he would be either dead or in the hospital. Riseling also said that none of the three plain clothes officers who were initially at the scene were carrying nightsticks.

When the three officers were attacked, two uniformed officers responded as back-up and drew and used their night sticks, said Riseling. "They were up against 15 people," she said.

According to Riseling, two female officers then arrived at the site and were also attacked. At some point, mace was sprayed and in the following confusion, two officers released the people they were holding and the group ran towards the woods.

Riseling acknowledged that there was a pause in the pursuit because the officer wanted to regroup and make sure they were not injured. One of the officers suffered a torn knee ligament.

The officers then encountered Maresca, Flynn, and Delise in the Old H Parking Lot, where there was another struggle, said Riseling.

"If there was brutality here, it was against the Public Safety," said Riseling.

Maresca was charged with disorderly conduct, inciting to riot, assault in the third degree, obstruction of justice, and resisting arrest; Delise was charged with obstructing government administration and previous warrants and Flynn was charged with disorderly conduct, resisting arrest, and obstructing government administration.

Hopefully, Awareness Week Will Instruct

The demolished car is back in the center of the Academic Mall, marking the beginning of Alcohol and Drug Awareness Week. Each day this week is scheduled with a host of programs geared to educate the campus community on the dangers of addiction. Most of the titles of the speeches, panels and presentations reflect the damage an addiction can do to a person. Hopefully, an equal amount of time in each event will be spent talking about how and why people come to abuse various substances.

Although most people know that heavy drinking and taking drugs is not beneficial to a person, fewer may know the extent of destructive forces of an addiction. Therefore, information on this specific topic is helpful.

But, people know they do have the choice to use certain substances, what they should be made aware of are the dangers and benefits cited for using them. Awareness weeks shouldn't be propaganda sessions, but should be informational forums. We have all seen demonstrations on how alcohol effects thought and motor processes, but certain benefits such as the cholesterol-lowering abilities of a glass of wine are not common knowledge. The awareness should go beyond the level of a warning and advice to abstain to the varying motivations of the casual user and the addict.

People should be taught the physical, psychological and emotional warning signs that line the path to addiction. A few drinks on a Saturday night isn't going to ruin anyone's life, but depending on any form of drug to get through the day definitely could.

People should also be advised strongly not to drink and drive. They should be made aware of the consequences their irresponsibility could have on the well-being of others. This should be one of the strongest messages, and pointers on how to avoid situations that put themselves and others in danger should definitely get the spotlight in presentations.

Not everyone who drinks or has experimented with drugs is going to become an addict. Sometimes the use of these substances can be helpful to a person who knows how to use them in moderation. On the other hand, some people cannot use them because they cannot judge their limit or are extremely prone to addiction. It is up to the person in the end to realize these things and seek guidance; any programs that can help them with this are to be commended. The fact that the numbers for counseling help are listed on the announcement posters is very good for this reason. An awareness week should help people determine if they are capable of handling their recreational substances and if not, what to do about it.

The prevalence of alcohol and other substances at social events is common. Teaching people just that these substances are bad, which is done many times in awareness programs, leaves the receiver of this information feeling as though the message is hypocritical. Do all the people that speak or hand out information at these events abstain from all drugs and alcohol? The chances are highly unlikely. Hopefully, the programs will leave people thinking about their motives in using alcohol and drugs and whether they are pleased with the choices they have made in the past or whether they will change them.

In this society people are free to make some choices, that is what living in a democracy is supposed to be about. However, a free system should also help its people with programs like awareness weeks to deal with the responsibility of making choices. Hopefully, the tone of this awareness week will be one of informing, not preaching and making people feel guilty if they choose to use in moderation and responsibly.

VIEWPOINT

Flex The Conscience

By Tom Weissenberger

Mr. Ron Nehring accuses Mitch Cohen of portraying America as a place of doom, gloom, and chaos while he asserts that this view is both unrealistic and outmoded. I would disagree. To me, the United States, with its 21,000 deaths by firearms (chaos), $300 billion military budget -- most of it headed for biological, chemical and atomic weapons -- (doom), and from one to two million homeless (gloom), is in dire need of a big shake-up. I feel that Mitch Cohen's call to the Stony Brook University population to get involved in debating and acting on some of the important problems we face is both timely and pragmatic. To get people to begin looking at things from the point of view of the oppressed is a big first step in being able to see and to feel a problem.

As for Mr. Nehring's charge that the ideas of the Red Balloon are laced with "sensationalist hype," I would advise him to skim through the annals of American foreign policy past and present, covert and otherwise, if he wants an idea of just how many millions of dollars per day have gone and still go to totalitarian dictators: Iran (1953), Guatemala (1954), the Dominican Republic (1963), and Chile (1973). These are only a few of the countries which have felt the lawless hand of the CIA come in and cause a coup d'etat -- with subsequent largesse to its authoritarian leaders extended by the U.S. government. During the 1980's, some three and one-half billion dollars have gone to little El Salvador. For a part of this period, the country has had so-called democratic elections which, up to this year anyway, resulted in what the mainstream press likes to term a "moderate" Christian Democrat Movement. The fact that this government was mere eyewash for the international community (in particular, the U.S. Congress), that the military had all real power, and that, most significantly, the extra-judicial death-squad killings never let up during this period, was not sufficient reason for the U.S. to reconsider its generous military and economic aid programs. That the government is now in the hands of the far-right political party, ARENA, whose leaders are closely tied to Roberto D'Aubisson, widely recognized as the principal in the assassination of Salvador's Archbishop Oscar Romero in 1980, is also no reason for the U.S. to discontinue its aid to El Salvador, which, in fact, still runs to millions of dollars per day in 1989.

As for Mr. Nehring's contention that Mitch Cohen should be thankful that he doesn't live in a country "where an oppressive government aims to control every aspect of life," perhaps he should do a little research into the way this government seeks to do just that. Two examples are the wiretapping and opening the mail of groups the government views as subversive (meaning those working to educate the population on the U.S.'s shameful domestic and foreign policy). Another example is a situation where those ripping off the public to the tune of billions, such as many Savings and Loan institutions, eventually get bailed out with public money, while those who dare to stand up for the oppressed -- Black Panthers in the 60's and 70's, American Indian leaders in the 70's and 80's, and Puerto Rican nationalists in the 80's -- get hounded and even assassinated by government agents.

EDUARD SHEVARDNADZE

The contention that, "Outside our borders, the American crusade for human rights has been tremendous," is either pathetic in the writer's naivete or discouraging in his evident ignorance. What was the U.S.'s response to the Tiananmen Square massacre in China? Rhetoric about the need for economic sanctions, blah, blah, blah. And the new revised policy? No changes. In Cambodia, with the retreat of the Vietnamese, hailed by the greater part of the population as liberators from the Khmer Rouge, the U.S. is now actively supporting the Khmer Rouge faction, the so-called perpetrators of genocide in Cambodia in the mid 70's. (Though, of course, mainstream commentators all manage to overlook the massive American bombing in the late 60's and early 70's against the predominantly agrarian and undefended Cambodian population, the "secret war" of Kissinger and Nixon, which led to the emergence of the brutal Khmer Rouge regime.) How does this square with Mr. Nehring's rose-tinted vision of the U.S.A.?

The desire to want to see the U.S., specifically the U.S. government, as good and well-meaning, is understandable in light of the way our consensus-dominated media and education system generally portray it. But as soon as one is able to remove the blinders, one begins to see it is just the opposite, and that the "evil empire" is situated right here within our own borders, the epicenter of which may be the Pentagon or the CIA headquarters in Langley. Whether or not one recognizes this depends to a large extent on the degree to which one's conscience is awakened and the degree to which one finds the status quo repugnant and unacceptable.

The rousing and exercising of one's conscience appear vital to me, and at the same time, unlikely to occur if one heeds the call of Mr. Nehring, with his promises of a great career and plentiful opportunities dangled at the end of his exercise in wishful thinking -- with which he seeks to distract the reader from what needs to be done.

(The writer is a Special Graduate Student now working toward his Teaching Certificate.)

Future Holds New Parking Fee

By Tracy Peers

Stony Brook students will probably come back to another fee when they return to school next fall. This new expense is a parking fee that must be paid in order to have a car on campus. Students are not the only ones who will be paying this fee; it will be extended to faculty and staff as well, according to university officials.

Originally Governor Cuomo stated that a parking fee should go into effect on September 1, 1989 and should be paid by the students. However, members of the SUNY Stony Brook administration felt the students should not bear the burden of this cost alone, therefore, the cost will be paid "across the board," said Hugh Mulligan, the Director of Auxiliary Services.

Due to a clause in the faculty union's contract, which states that no parking fees can be imposed without negotiation, the fee is being discussed between the parties involved at the present time, said Mulligan. The Stony Brook community will see this additional cost next fall at the earliest, he said.

The money collected from this fee will go to improving the roads on campus, increasing security in university parking lots, and bettering the campus transportation system. The exact amount of this fee has not yet been determined; it will not be set until the costs of these changes are estimated, said Mulligan.

A parking committee consisting of members from Student Polity, U.U.P., the Faculty, the administration, the Health Science Center, and graduate students will be involved in discussing this issue, said Mulligan.

Patriots on the way to a comeback in the standings. Statesman/Craig Warmbrand

Comeback Staged

By Amy Flateman

Interceptions, penalties and injuries have hurt the Stony Brook football team all season. It looked as if they would never win a game, last Saturday, they came so close to winning their first game, when they took on the C.W. Post Pioneers, however, as in the past four games they came up on the short end of the stick, when a Joe Moran pass landed out of reach of the waiting hands of Joe Cappellino with 0:09 remaining in the fourth quarter.

This week the Patriots (1-5) swore they would not make the same mistakes. This time they kept their promise and defeated Bentley College (3-2) in Massachusetts Friday night. For the Patriots it was their first win of the season and it came just in time.

The Patriots didn't just want to win, they wanted to win in a big way and win big they did. They beat Bentley by a score of 43-24. The Patriots gained 239 yards rushing. On the other end of the coin, the Patriots defense held Bentley to just 12 yards rushing. Bentley did out pass the Patriots by more than 2 to 1, but the Patriots held on to win.

The Patriots had possession of the ball twice in the first quarter, both times they scored. On Stony Brook's first drive, the offense got the ball down to Bentley's 24 yard line, and Bob Burden kicked a 41 foot field goal to put the first points on the board for the Patriots. With 1:17 left in the first period, Milton Mills scored the Patriots first touchdown to them up by a score of 10-0.

The second quarter was also dominated by the Patriots. Freshman Oliver Bridges had a 1 yard run for the Patriots second touchdown but the extra point failed. Bridges led the Patriots on the day. He rushed for 137 yards on 22 carries, scoring 4 of the Patriots 6 touchdowns.

By halftime the Patriots had held Bentley to 76 yards to their 182.

With the beginning of the third quarter, the Patriots fumbled the ball and Bentley recovered and Staffin Zearth kicked a 31 yard field goal to make the score 16-3. The Patriots looked like they were back to their same old tricks. With 1:20 left in the quarter, Bentley's Steve Riggs took an 11 yard pass from quarterback Kevin Lucey to score. Zearth's extra point kick was good and the score was 16-10. Bentley began to play aggressively. Bridges did not want to lose another game. In the final quarter, he erupted for 63 yards and scored three touchdowns.

Jim Napoli also scored a touchdown for the Patriots in the fourth quarter. He ran for two yards into the endzone.

The fourth quarter began to look like touchdowns were just given up by both teams to increase the final score. Every time
