

Commuters Spending Sparks Debate

By HOWARD SALTZ

Commuters will have the chance to vote Wednesday night on the fate of a controversial proposal in which money allocated to the Commuter College would be used to pay the majority of the cost of a campus-wide festival.

The proposal, which has been met by stiff opposition from Commuter College and Polity officials, suggests that $7,000 of the festival's $8,000 expenditures be assumed by the Commuter College. The festival, scheduled for April 25 in the Engineering Parking Lot, would replace the annual Kelly Quad Fest and be dubbed the "Long Island Rock Festival" to acknowledge the added presence of the Commuter College. The proposal requires the approval of the majority of commuters present at the 7:00 PM Wednesday night meeting.

"I resent the fact that the money is being spent in this manner," said Commuter Senator Richard Zuckerman. He added that he would rather see the Commuter College's money go toward other, more commuter-oriented programs. Polity Treasurer Lori Reckson agreed, complaining that "the Commuter College is a good thing, but it's being abused. . . $7,000 is exorbitant."

The confusion regarding the appropriation of money to a campus-wide party was the latest in a series of setbacks that have clouded the future of the Commuter College. In January, the resignation of two key executives forced the Commuter College to close its doors. Without an adequate staff, the college, which is located in the basement of Gray College, was prone to vandalism and theft. Zuckerman suggested that it temporarily close, and that any decision of the remaining four executives be reviewed by an ad hoc committee of any commuters wishing to vote, including commuter senators. Otherwise, the executives would have the power to spend the remaining half of the Commuter

Alumni Association Faces Extinction

The Stony Brook Alumni Association, representing 48,000 graduates, may be disbanded by May 4, if the State University goes through with its intended budget cuts of $26 million statewide, representing 300 jobs on the Stony Brook campus.

The Alumni Board of Directors, in its regular meeting held yesterday, voted 10-6-1 to consider disbanding if proper support is not given forthwith to the association. With the resignation of Alumni Director Richard Gerber Feb. 15 — as well as the subsequent loss of an alumni secretary due to association budget restraints — there is currently no permanent staff to administer the day-to-day activities of the Alumni.

Due to the State's hiring freeze, no new Alumni Director may be employed at this time.

Gov. Hugh Carey's proposed budget for fiscal 1981 calls for a total cut in funding for the SUNY system of $26 million. This cut could translate into the loss of 300 jobs on the Stony Brook campus if passed by the state legislature on April 1.

The association's resolution calls for the University to provide funding for both a full-time alumni director, at a $20,000 salary level, and a full-time association secretary. The Alumni Association administers all contact between graduates and the campus, including travel, insurance, and dental programs. It also maintains a data base of over 30,000 names of Stony Brook alumni.

If the Alumni Association is disbanded, most of these activities will have to cease. All future potential contributions to the University by alumni will be severely affected. The future of the four alumni scholarship funds is uncertain at this time.

According to University Relations Director David Woods, who is currently acting as the Alumni Director, "The hiring freeze is a serious problem, but the University is committed to maintaining the Alumni program and office until the time we are able to fill that position." He said that Acting University President Richard Schmidt will hold a meeting late next week with Stony Brook Foundation President Edward Gunnigle, Woods and others to address the problem.

"I don't think there is going to be any real problem," Woods said adding that "the alumni area and other areas of external [financial] support are going to become more crucial" to the University.

Until a director can be hired, Woods said the University will "shuffle some staff to the office to provide interim help." In addition, three student assistants will be hired to help out.

The resolution, introduced by Jack Guameri of the Class of 1968, calls for the association's Board of Directors to meet May 4 if the University takes no action in restoring the lost positions. At that time, the board will decide whether to suspend all activities of the association until the University renews its financial support.

The Stony Brook Alumni Association was founded in 1965 to serve the graduates of the University.

Iranian Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh said the embassy militants yesterday imposed two conditions for the transfer of American hostages to government authority. He chastised the captors for their action, saying it exposed their behavior to the nation.

"It is certain the students do not intend to hand over the hostages or to let the United Nations commission visit them," Ghotbzadeh said in a statement reported by the official Pars news agency. It did not indicate whether he meant the captors never would turn the approximately 50 hostages over.

The militants, who appear ready to defy the Ruling Revolutionary Council's order to turn over the Americans, demanded eight hours' notice of the transfer of custody and insisted the notice be broadcast nationally "for public information," Ghotbzadeh was quoted as saying.

The militants also want Ghotbzadeh to acknowledge that the moment the Americans are in the custody of authorities "the receiver is responsible for their lives," Pars said.

An arrangement to transfer the hostages out of the embassy compound fell through Saturday when the militants objected to Ghotbzadeh acting on behalf of the government. Even if they are put in government custody, it does not appear likely that the hostages would be released soon.

The minister, branded a liar by the militants who allege he said falsely that the transfer had been approved by revolutionary leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, said he was given the conditions Sunday during negotiations for the captives' transfer to his ministry.

Ghotbzadeh charged the demand for a prior radio broadcast was aimed at including a crowd to go to the embassy so the militants could claim they had the support of the people, Pars said.

"From the Foreign Ministry point of view, the behavior of the students shows to the great Iranian nation the essence of how the problem is," he said.

There was no indication of the next step in the showdown although the militants scheduled a news conference for later in the day.

Earlier yesterday, they said they were not yet ready to hand over the hostages and that timing of the transfer would be announced later.

Ljubljana, Yugoslavia — The condition of 87-year-old President Josip Broz Tito, after a week of apparent stabilization, has turned "very grave," his doctors said yesterday.

The daily medical bulletin, the most comprehensive and specific since Feb. 27, said:

- "A grave kidney insufficiency persists further.
- "A general trend to spontaneous bleeding is marked."
- "Heart weakness continues to be present."

It was the first time in weeks that Tito's doctors described his general condition as "very grave" instead of just "grave."

"It is a terrible thing to have to wait like this," said one of the translators who reads the daily bulletin to reporters. "We are all very nervous and we do not know when we will have to read that tragic bulletin. It could happen any day."

Houston — Former Texas Governor John Connally, beaten a day before in South Carolina where he hoped to launch a serious bid for the Republican presidential nomination, stepped out of the race yesterday.

Connally, who announced his candidacy one year ago, said it no longer would be "to the good of my party and the nation for me to continue my candidacy."

He said that from the first he realized it was an uphill battle to win the nomination and now "among all my home folks I am withdrawing as a candidate. But, I am not withdrawing from politics, as I will continue to speak out on all the issues."

Former California Gov. Ronald Reagan won South Carolina's 25 delegates while collecting about 54 percent of the vote.

Connally withdrew before 790 supporters, many of them who had been with him when he first announced.

Booking Error Cancels 'Kids' Show

By NEIL H. BUTTERKLEE

A booking error caused an Iranian student rally and the Kids for Kids production, "Little Mary Sunshine," to be scheduled in the Union auditorium for the same time. As a result, the students would not leave and forced the cancellation of the show.

Union secretary Carole Friedman, said that due to a misunderstanding about dates, the show's reservations for the room were cancelled, without anyone being informed. Thus, when the cast and crew arrived, the auditorium was already occupied by the Iranian students who were celebrating the first anniversary of the Shah's overthrow in Iran.

The Kids for Kids staff members said they offered to help move the Iranians to another place, such as the Union Ballroom, but they were turned down by the students.

The student who represented the Iranians refused to move the celebration, which lasted until 10 PM. The rally consisted of slide shows, lectures and food. According to witnesses, one of the students said,

"we pay tuition here so why should we move?"

In response to this remark several people from Kids for Kids, including Executive Director Carol Dahir, asked to speak to the Iranian group as a whole, but this was also refused.

"Losing Friday night kept us from breaking even on the show," said Dahir. Between advance sales for about 200 people, income from refreshments and royalties for the show, Kids for Kids secretary Shelly Wurman estimated the loss at $500.

"Because of a booking error on the part of the Union, I don't think that Kids for Kids should suffer financially," said Robert Willis, an economics professor and one of the parents present.

The Iranian students were unavailable for comment.

When asked to comment on the mishap, the Union's Acting Director William Fornadel said he was unaware of the incident.

Despite the incident being non-violent, Campus Security responded to the scene but no arrests were made.

Head-On Collision Injures Islip Man

A head-on automobile collision on North Loop Road early Saturday morning resulted in extensive damage to both vehicles and minor injuries to one driver.

According to Campus Security, the accident occurred at 12:36 AM at the top of the curving hill by the Graduate Biology Building. A Security officer said that the driver, a 22-year-old East Islip man, may have caused the accident in misjudging the distance of an oncoming car and swerving into it. There were two people in each car, and it is not known whether they are students at the University.

According to Marc Teitelbaum, Ambulance Corps Assistant Chief, the Corps was notified by Security at 12:40 AM and arrived to find the East Islip man wandering along the side of the road. He suffered lacerations of his forehead and leg and possibly may have had a concussion because he was found "confused and disoriented," said Teitelbaum. The man was taken to Mather Hospital and admitted in satisfactory condition.

Commuter College Spending Questioned

College's annual $35,000 budget.

One of the executives, Programming Director Joe Noah, the initiator of the festival proposal, argued that a party on this scale would be a reasonable expense if the turnout of otherwise apathetic students is as expected. Noah said that commuters would have a party like those in the quads, and that it would benefit everyone. Kelly A RHD, Resident Hall Director, Carson Tang, producer of the festival, maintained that the festival "might even make money, if it is handled correctly." Noah agreed, stating that most of the $7,000 would be returned so that the cost would be minimized.

However, many others remained skeptical. Reckson insisted that this was not the first misappropriation of funds by the Commuter College, citing a five-page advertisement that appeared in Statesman last semester that cost $750. She insisted that those in the decision-making capacity do not adequately reflect the needs of commuters. "A lot of senators that represent commuters don't represent them," she said.

Zuckerman charged that the problem lies with the executives of the Commuter College. He said he believes that money would be put to its best use if it were channeled into programs such as workshops for commuters, or even to subsidize mass transit. "The Executive Committee wants to get rid of its money," he said of the festival proposal, "and it doesn't know how to do it."

State Bans Sale of Drug Paraphernalia

Charleston, W. Va. (AP) — Gov. Jay Rockefeller has signed a bill aimed at stopping the sale of paraphernalia for drug use, such as pipes for smoking marijuana.

Rockefeller said Saturday he hoped the measure would help stem a growing drug problem in the state. The legislation, which takes effect April 1, makes it a misdemeanor to own a business which sells any items which can be used for smoking marijuana or other controlled substances or ingesting cocaine. Anyone convicted of the offense can be fined up to $5,000 or given a jail term of up to one year. Anyone who acts as an associate in such a business, if convicted, can be fined up to $1,000 and jailed for up to six months.

Poll Predicts Ford Over Carter

New York (AP) — A new ABC News Lou Harris poll says former President Gerald Ford would defeat President Jimmy Carter if the 1980 presidential election were held today.

In addition, the poll said Ford may now be a slight favorite over Ronald Reagan among Republicans and independent voters for the GOP presidential nomination.

The poll was taken last week and completed before the final results of Saturday's South Carolina primary were known. Reagan won that GOP primary so decisively that the second-place finisher John Connally dropped out of the race yesterday.

The poll said Ford would get 54 percent of the vote to Carter's 44 percent if the November general election were held now. Two percent of the registered voters interviewed were not sure.

But Carter would defeat Reagan by a 58-40 margin, the same poll showed. Two percent were not sure.

Republican and independent voters in the poll were asked for their choice for the GOP presidential nominee.

Ford was named by 33 percent and Reagan by 27 percent. Because of the sampling error margin involved in these figures—ABC-Harris polls generally have error margins of about 6 percentage points either way—one can only say that Ford and Reagan split the vote, with Ford perhaps slightly ahead.

Professor of Physics at Ohio State University, are joint recipients of the Rumford Premium, a scientific prize established in 1796 and awarded every few years by the American Academy of Arts and Sciences for discoveries in the fields of heat and light.

Previous winners include J.W. Gibbs, A.H. Compton, Enrico Fermi and Charles Townes. Professors Yang and Mills were honored for their development of the non-Abelian gauge theory, also known as the Yang-Mills theory. This theory underlies present ideas about the fundamental forces of nature which bind matter together. The award was presented at the Academy's 1608th meeting, held in February at the House of the Academy in Boston, Mass.

CATERING OF DISTINCTION - WE DELIVER TO THE COLLEGE

Idiosyncracies

A proposal that would allocate $7,000 in Commuter College funds to a campus-wide festival will be debated among commuters Wednesday. The time may be at hand to examine the idiosyncracies that surround commuter politics.

It does seem unusual that $7,000 — roughly 40 percent of the Commuter College's total budget for the semester — will be spent on a campus-wide party. Perhaps the Commuter College should concentrate its resources on events that specifically deal with commuting students' needs. Having a campus-wide festival is fine — but a campus-wide festival should be campus-funded. It seems that the Commuter College is spending its money simply because it has the money to spend.

What is of even greater concern is that the power to decide important issues is in the hands of a small group of students. Only six commuters ran for executive positions this year, and all were uncontested victors, as all but 107 commuters failed to show up for the elections. These six would have the power to decide how $35,000 would be spent.

Elections for Commuter Senators are equally ridiculous, and almost half of the 29 commuter seats are unfilled. If elections are such a farce, that the importance of such positions becomes negligible, and the power of those positions should be decreased. Perhaps the committee of commuter senators and students that was temporarily established to oversee the appropriation of Commuter College funds until it gets over its most recent apathy attack should be made permanent.

It is clear that the proposal to finance the campus-wide festival would be a misappropriation of funds. The Commuter College is using its money recklessly, and it is not a small sum of money that is in question.

Misdirected Action

This University lost a respected and competent Residence Hall Director (RHD) last Friday. Cathi Rivera, Cardozo's RHD for the past two years, resigned her position because she would not yield to the demands of Residence Life that she move to Gray College.

The RHD program has stirred controversy among students since its inception. Many feel it is unnecessary, others think that it is an infringement upon their rights. Yet, it seemed that whatever negative feelings that students have towards RHDs, their reaction to at least one RHD — Rivera — was one of unified love and respect.

Despite this unprecedented concern on the part of the residents of Cardozo, despite the fact that Rivera did not want to be transferred, Residence Life refused to renege on its position, leaving Rivera no other choice than resignation.

We realize that as an employee of Residence Life, Rivera, by contract, could legally have been moved wherever her employer asked her to. In the private sector, employees are constantly transferred to other parts of the country and even the world.

But, there are two other factors here. Firstly, Rivera maintained that although not explicitly stated in her contract, she was hired for the Cardozo position. It was that college which Residence Life showed her and it was that college where there was a vacancy at the time of her interview.

Secondly, there was another concerned party which was adversely affected by Rivera's resignation — the residents of Cardozo. It was the students who benefitted most from Rivera's diligence and competence, it is they who stand to suffer the most from her departure.

The controversy over Rivera's reassignment is a case in point where misdirected administrative action results in a loss to all parties concerned — Rivera lost her job, Residence Life lost one of their finest employees, and the students, most of all, have lost a close friend and a superior RHD.

We only hope that a lesson has been learned.

A Look at Jane Porcino

Jane Porcino: A Force in the Field Of Gerontology

By CHRISTINE CASTALDI

Jane Porcino, an assistant professor of the School of Allied Health Professions was named one of the "80 Women to Watch in the 80's" by Ms. magazine. She was selected as an activist who was improving the lives of women in a variety of ways.

JANE PORCINO

Porcino, 56, went back to school at age 50, after raising seven children, and received her Masters in Social Work from Stony Brook's School of Social Welfare. About two months ago, she received her Ph.D. in the field of gerontology. In addition, she formed an organization for women over 40, the National Action Forum for Older Women (NAFOW) in 1977, of which she is now co-director. Porcino said her present goals are to raise funds to carry out projects full-time, and to finish co-authoring a hand-book for middle-aged women.

Her book tries to provide information and ideas on health, growth, independence and alternative lifestyles for women who are experiencing or planning for their middle or later years. A great deal of Porcino's research comes from questionnaires she sent to women around the country. Some of the women's responses to the various questions will be included in a soon-to-be-released paperback edition.

"The past 10 years of my life have been an evaluation of my own personal needs to raise awareness to women all over the country, some of the important issues that middle life can bring to them," said Porcino. She said that it is important for today's woman to have positive role models they can look to. "It is very important for women to have positive feelings about growing old," she said.

Porcino, who tried to encourage women in the second half of their life to "appreciate their uniqueness and value, to explore their own creative potential."

"That is the aim of NAFOW — to help women see their importance and value in the American society," she said.

Today, more and more people are living past the ages of 65 and 70 because of improved medical treatment. Thus, according to Robert Butler, the Director of the National Institution of Aging, "within the next 10 years all the health professions will be dealing with 70 percent of aging people."

"Because of better care for the young, people are living longer," said Porcino.

Porcino said that she would like to see a center which will do research and offer services for the elderly in Suffolk County. According to her, Suffolk County has more elderly people than any other county in the state excluding New York City.

Stony Brook, she suggested, can become this center. "Hopefully, gerontology will become a larger part of the Medical School, and maybe someday, teaching, research and providing services will be part of it," Porcino said. As a step in that direction, the dean of the Medical School, Dr. Marvin Kushner, has recently appointed Porcino to direct a task force on aging. A meeting to organize the task force will be held sometime this month.

Porcino hopes that the new University Hospital will have a menopause clinic, where some research can be conducted for middle aged women in the surrounding community.

Last summer she spoke in Washington to the House of Representatives where she recommended more larger scale studies focusing exclusively on the normal processes of female aging. She also requested more federal funds for research on aging.

In addition to her other responsibilities, Porcino also teaches several graduate and undergraduate courses at Stony Brook. Her classes are open to both main campus and Health Sciences Center students. "I enjoy teaching small classes," said Porcino, "usually with 15 to 35 students in each." One course, "Caring for the Elderly" is given both in the spring and fall. In the fall, she teaches, "Older Women in America," and in the spring, "Community Researchers for the elderly."

Hospital Implements Innovative Program

By LORI LETIZIA

Although the opening date for the Obstetrics and Gynecology Department of the University Hospital has yet to be determined, many programs that will benefit patients and the surrounding community have been implemented, said Dr. Martin Stone, chairman of the department.

According to the department's 1979 annual report, two innovative programs are being implemented at the hospital. One is a community advisory board formed by many women's health organizations, including the Women's Health Alliance. The board meets regularly to advise, counsel, and facilitate hospital policies. The residency review committee has approved the first residency training program at the hospital. The program will start with eight residents assisted by Dr. Mark Funt, chief of gynecology.

The emphasis of the department is on high risk pregnancy cases and perinatal care, endocrinology, genetics, and oncology. High risk pregnancy cases are determined by criteria based on the physical history of the woman. According to Stone, important criteria include Rh factor of the maternal blood, history of diabetes, and previous problematic pregnancies. A perinatal center is being planned for the hospital. At the center care will be provided for women who are about to give birth. Endocrinology programs, headed by Dr. Zev Rosenwaks, will handle physical problems related to menopause and abnormalities in endocrine organ functioning that are hereditary in nature.

The genetics program specializes in genetic counseling aided by amniocentesis, cytogenetic evaluations which evaluate the chromosomes or hereditary material of the cells, and alpha fetoprotein screening which detects neural tube development defects in the unborn child. The faculty in these sections include Carolyn Trunca, chief of cytogenetics and Dr. James Macri, chief of the neural tube defect program.

Oncology is the branch of medicine dealing with tumors and this area will be stressed in relation to breast, cervical, and uterine cancer.

Oncology services will begin in July 1980, headed by Dr. William Mann. Under the supervision of associate professor Linda Tseng, breast tumor assays are now being performed. The results of the assay indicates whether or not a woman may receive endocrine therapy for breast cancer. The University Hospital and Health Sciences Center laboratories possess some of the most advanced technological facilities to detect and deal with these health problems.

Doctors Seek Answers to Sleep Disorder Problems

By THERESA M. MYSIEWICZ

You are definitely not alone if you have a sleeping problem — a fact most clearly brought to the light of day on the 10th floor of the Health Sciences Center tower, where patients ranging in age from seven to 70 visit the Medical Schools Sleep Disorder Program.

"Nine million prescriptions for sleep problems were given out last year — a small fraction of actual drugs taken for sleep related problems," said Dr. Merrill Mitler, director of the program. Mitler said "there is widespread abuse of prescription and non-prescription medicine in this country." According to Mitler, it was the appreciation of Dr. Stanley Yolles, professor and chairman of the Psychiatry Department, of the scope of this drug abuse problem and his awareness of sleep disorder as an up and coming clinical discipline within medicine that led to the setting up of the clinic in 1978, a plan which began about nine years ago.

The clinic is designed for "the diagnosis and treatment of patients with chronic problems involving the sleep-wake cycle," said Mitler. Since the clinic opened two to three patients come per week. For the most part patients are referred to the program by their primary care physicians.

Many of the patients had been taking drugs for their sleep problems before going to the clinic. But, said Mitler, "very few patients get correct diagnosis. There is no sense in giving these drugs without proper diagnosis." Mitler cited, as an indication of the problem confronted, that "of all the patients we've seen complaining of insomnia about 20 percent have as the primary cause (of the insomnia) sleeping pills."

The basic aim of the clinic is to correctly diagnose the cause of sleep disorders of patients who have had problems over a period of time. About 70 percent of the patients have organic diseases. Professionals at the program said that according to diagnosis the rate of success at the clinic is 100 percent. Still, such problems as narcolepsy, a neurological disease causing excessive sleepiness, and sleep apnea which can lead to complaints of sleepiness or insomnia are treatable rather than curable.

"Since we've been here we've seen some interesting patients," said Mitler. Pierre Hahn, engineer in charge of the Diagnostic Lab, added that the variety of disorders encountered is unexpected in a relatively new unit of the program's size. The disorders treated include sleepwalking and the problem of falling asleep spontaneously during the course of the day. Curiously, according to Mitler, "Most of the patients we see have problems with excessive sleepiness" rather than with insomnia.

One of the most surprising success stories of the program occurred in patients in whom organic disease was ruled out as the cause of their problem. These patients "were willing to resort to psycho-therapy, sleeping pills, anything . . . that would ease their complaints," said Mitler. The solution came from a practical sense stance and proved much simpler than the worry. The patients were put on schedule therapy, "a civilian form of Boot Camp," according to Mitler. In Schedule Therapy the patient is asked to follow a uniformly rigid schedule seven days per week. Once patients began to follow the more uniform lifestyle their complaints subsided. "We shouldn't have been surprised," said Mitler, "but we were."

The program operates a three bed facility for diagnosis. Here polygraph information, in the form of a polysomnogram, is gathered through electrodes pasted on the head and various muscles of the patient. Usually one night is required for the test. The sensors scan eye, heart, respiratory, muscle and brain activity. "Sleep is not a steady state. It is a continuous cycle that varies as it goes through its cycle," said Hahn. This is a relatively new discovery, observed about 25 years ago by researchers. In addition, sleep is age related. Babies may sleep 18 hours and dream 50 percent of the time. Whereas older people may sleep five hours and dream 20 percent of the time.

In the diagnostic lab the stage of sleep, there are five, at which the problem occurs can be determined. For example, the dream state is identified by an awake brain in a body with no postural muscle activity. "It is an awake brain in a frozen body," said Hahn. Whereas a deep sleep with no dream activity is indicated by a sleeping brain in an active body. Sleepwalking occurs at this stage.

Although the program is diagnostic in nature, research studies are carried out by various members of the program. And a recent study of 219 students at a local high school conducted by L. White, P.M. Hahn and Mitler indicated that 40 percent of the group complain of daytime sleepiness. This is a fairly high percentage for a general population.

Few of the students spoke to professionals of their problem. "We don't know yet why they don't speak about it," said Hahn. It is hoped that the study will give insight into the onset of insomnia in older patients who arrive at the clinic.

Stony Brook is on the forefront of medicine in having a clinical facility for sleep disorder.

Members of the program offer courses for residents in the Medical School in sleep disorder, as well as offering seminars for undergraduates and course modules on the subject for medical students.

The first clinics for Sleep Disorder were set up in the late 1960s. At the present time there are only about 35 institutions in the nation.

Recently, however, the U.S. Government has given some attention to sleep disorder as a clinical discipline. Project Sleep: "National Program on Insomnia and Sleep Disorders" has been set up through the Department of Health, Education and Welfare in an attempt to organize knowledge in what they refer to as "this neglected area of medicine."

Though at the present time diagnosis of sleep disorders is expensive and time-consuming, as with other areas of this society, progress is rapid. And Mitler offered a pronouncement on the future of sleep disorder programs in this country, saying that, "In the next 15 years it will be as common as the X-ray."

Olympic Games Unite the World

By KEVIN A. WEEKS

The torch has been extinguished. The crowds are gone. Main Street in Lake Placid is calm now, and life will soon return to normal in this tiny Adirondack village. The XIIIth Winter Olympic Games are over.

Yet for the millions of us who witnessed them, who got caught up in the U.S. Hockey Team's relentless drive to a gold medal, who felt the warmth and spirit flowing out of the Olympic Village, the torch will remain forever lit in our hearts.

We play games 365 days a year in America, but the NBA or NFL can't even begin to touch on what these games did. For 13 magnificent days, the world pushed aside its problems, its divisions and quarrels, and came together in a spirit of good will and friendship that in the long run will transcend the disappointments of Linda Fratianne, Randy Gardner and Tai Babalonia, and that will overshadow the glories of Eric Heiden and Ingemar Stenmark. The Olympic Games, an endangered species, made a strong bid for survival this past week, and showed the world that the "Olympic spirit" is not some uncouth joke, but that it's there and it works.

Not even the announcement that the United States will continue its motion for a boycott of the Moscow summer games could dampen the spirit in Lake Placid. At least for two weeks, it didn't matter. The youth of the world put on a show which made the quarrels of the older generation look a bit sick. National boundaries were cut in two, as when the spectators gave Irina Rodnina and Aleksandr Zaitsev a standing ovation in their final figure skating appearance in the United States, forgetting for a least a moment that their leaders and ours disagree, and only seeing the beauty, grace and skill that is common to all mankind, black, white, red or yellow, Ukrainian or Californian.

Yet we all leave these games with a parting tear, because those other things do matter now. The athletes have gone home, to Kiev, Zurich, Liverpool, Vienna, Peking, Bonn, Northridge and North Easton. They've done their part; but will it be enough? Yes, the Olympic Games are in trouble, my friend. They may never be this good again. Why? Because people who obviously don't know the least bit about what the Olympic Games mean, are willing to make the youth of the world, as always our final hope in the days to come, suffer for the mistakes of the world's leaders, for their inability to communicate with each other. Nobody born under the democratic ideal supports the Soviet presence in Afghanistan, but the Olympic Games are not the proper, not the most effective, tool to use as a "punishment."

Who will be punished? Well, there's Bill Rodgers, and Renaldo Nehemiah, and Sebastian Coe, and every other Olympic athlete who has poured out individual money, sweat and time in the hope of reaching a goal; a goal that Eric Heiden was allowed to realize, but that might be snatched from within the grasp of these others. Who will suffer? In a word, us. We need to witness what happened in Lake Placid, at least every four years, to give us a glimmer of hope, something to hold on to; to reassure us that we can make things work on this planet, after all.

Oh, the Olympics have had their problems over the years, but usually as a result of the type of outside, political intervention which now hounds them. The 1972 Munich Games were turned into a bloodbath by senseless terrorists. The South African nations boycotted the 1976 Games in Montreal. Even these games were tarnished somewhat, when the Taiwanese contingent was for all intents and purposes barred from participating at Lake Placid. True, the incident was seemingly forgotten in the fervor which swept over the Olympic Village, and that's wrong; but these Games were pretty hard to find fault with. Just when it had to be, when it was needed the most, the Olympics were nearly perfect.

Still, it appears likely that the Moscow summer games will be destroyed, and the future of the games themselves may also come up short of breath by the end of the decade. So, we hang on to the memories, of Heiden and Craig, Eruzione and Fratianne, Mahre and Wenzel, Cousins and Innauer, Rodnina and Zaitsev. A part of all of us may have died in the last embers of the Olympic flame, its last, lingering hope for survival being in the hearts of those who felt that there was something worthwhile about what happened last week. Say it if you must: it lives on in the hearts of the idealists.

We can say that politics and sports don't mix, but the fact is that they have, they do, and they will. Maybe it's a fact of life that has to be accepted, albeit with a grain of salt. Maybe it just has to be that way, and that's really too bad.

No, the Olympic Games may not be able to save the world, but they sure can't hurt things. If we kill the games, chances are that we'll be contributing toward the death of something much, much dearer to us all. That, indeed, would be a shame.

Capitalism and Death or Socialism and a Future

By JERRY SCHECTER

I started at Stony Brook as an undergraduate in 1968. It was a period of intense political struggle on campus, the height of the anti-Vietnam War movement. I became involved in the only organization which was fighting concretely against the war (e.g., stopping military recruiters, preventing Defense Department research from being carried out, etc.), the Students for a Democratic Society. From the fight against the war I began to see how the entire system of capitalism was at fault; how wars were carried out so U.S. corporations could maintain influence in an area and make profit (imperialism). I began to see how racism was used as a divide and conquer tactic (splitting apart Latin, Asian, native American, black and white people) in the U.S., and as an ideology to increase patriotism and militarism. For example, the idea that Vietnamese were "gooks" allowed U.S. soldiers to believe they were not killing human beings and fellow workers. I also began to see how capitalism affected working people, including campus workers at Stony Brook, and why students who were serious about fighting war needed to ally with workers. It became clear that to end war, you needed to end capitalism. This could be done only in deeds as well as in words. So, I became a Communist and joined the predominantly working class Progressive Labor Party (PLP).

There was another "movement" against the Vietnam War. It consisted of supporters of liberal politicians (rallying people around the racist slogan "Bring the U.S. troops home" — with not one mention of the millions of Asians being slaughtered), self-styled (anti-working class) radicals, and self-serving Polity bureaucrats (who claimed that fighting "imperialism" was not a "student issue" and therefore irrelevant).

After U.S. troops were withdrawn from Southeast Asia, the latter movement disappeared. No longer were U.S. soldiers being killed, or Americans being drafted, so who cared if the capitalist system continued to oppress people? Suddenly in the past few weeks, the offspring of this movement has re-emerged, awakened from dormancy by the threat of military registration. Where has this movement been for the past 10 years, while rebellions against apartheid were mounted in South Africa, while the Ku Klux Klan and Nazi Party have reappeared, while the anti-busing and Proposition 13 movements have added significantly to economic cutbacks and racial segregation, while the U.S. and Soviet capitalists have fought various wars-by-proxy (e.g. Ethiopia versus Somalia, South Yemen versus North Yemen, etc.) leading up to the main event of World War III?

Only the PLP, along with the seven-year-old International Committee Against Racism (InCAR), has consistently been organizing against growing racism and the increased threat of war abroad and fascism at home. It is no coincidence that we began the anti-racist war movement ALMOST FOUR YEARS AGO — not because we are crystal-ball gazers — but because we had some, albeit incomplete, understanding of the nature of international capitalism. That understanding stems from seeing the interconnection between war, racism, unemployment, educational cutbacks, etc. All have their roots in this economic system in which a few people make profit off the misery of many.

A word about Polity and Statesman. Today's Polity bureaucrats are cut from the same mold as their predecessors. They seem mainly interested in self-advancement and in rubbing shoulders with famous people. Take Polity President David Herzog. Undoubtedly a nice guy. But what has he done? He went to a tea party with President Jimmy Carter and came back saying that maybe there are some points about military registration. Is this the type of leadership students need? Or take the PSC. They refused to recognize InCAR and then moved on to begin deregistration of other groups. Clearly InCAR, along with PLP, has them worried, because in the fight against racism and imperialism, we don't always play by the ground rules set up to allow racism and imperialism to continue unhindered. (By the way, in this case, even the PSC didn't play by their own rules.) InCAR and PLP are running candidates for Polity in April. I encourage students to help build the anti-racist war movement by putting anti-racists and communists into Polity.

Concerning Statesman: In my 12 years here, I'd have to say the present editors have sunk to a new low by running editorials on how "we" have to beef up the image of U.S. capitalism abroad. If we follow the editor's advice, we'll all wind up with a bayonet in Teheran fighting for Exxon's profits.

I believe there is only one winning alternative. Join the fight for socialist revolution to once and for all end the threat of imperialist war and fascism. One step in this direction is the May Day march Sat., May 3 in Brooklyn. We'll be marching for socialist revolution, for international working class unity, and against imperialist war, racist attacks on minority workers, and attacks on the working class as a whole by the bankers who openly run New York City. I believe the choice is becoming clearer: capitalism and death, or socialism and the chance for a future for the working class.

Ford Over Carter
 A surprising finding of the poll was that Rep. John Anderson, R-Ill., was the choice of 15 percent of the GOP-Independent group. That put him in a virtual tie with George Bush, who received the backing of 14 percent.
 Others received 7 percent. Four percent of the voters polled were not sure.
 Those results compare to a ABC-Harris poll taken in November 1979 which showed Ford with 25 percent, Reagan 30 percent, Bush 30 percent, Anderson 2 percent and other candidates 25 percent.
