Teaching Assistants Consider Strike

By TOM CHAPPELL

A group of graduate Teaching Assistants (TAs) is considering a strike if the University follows plans to cut funds available for TA positions next year.

The group will present a list of demands to several administrators, including Richard Schmidt, Acting University President, in a petition according to Sociology graduate student Jim Bloch.

Bloch, one of the groups organizers, said the demands include guaranteed funding for all who have completed more than four years in their program, an increase in salary from $3550 to $4800 with cost of living adjustments, and maintenance of the number of existing TA positions.

Sidney Gelber, Vice-President for Academic Affairs, would not comment on either the University's reaction to these demands or the possibility of a strike. He blamed the planned cutbacks on reductions in the SUNY budget. "There is only a finite sum of money available,"

Gelber said.

TA positions are funded through department faculty budgets, according to Gelber. "Faculty [budget] lines can be converted to TA lines but then you cut faculty," he said. "We need TAs but we need faculty

Graduate students, however, diverted from other areas and used to supplement the TA budget. "This is the last area that should be cut," said former Polity Vice-President Frank Jackson, who has been to meet living expenses. helping the graduate students plot strategy.

Senate passed a resolution supporting the graduate TAs. The resolution charged that the University will "knowingly and deliberately cripple" the TA program by cutting school," he said, "And it's worth funds to its participants.

Bloch said that the petition was formulated by more than 60 TAs from 16 academic departments, at a meeting Wednesday. The group did not attach a deadline to its demands, according to Bloch, because a strike would be called only as a

Artists Awarded by SB Foundation

By STEPHANIE SAKSON

Hauppauge — The Stony Brook Foundation honored the arts last night by presenting their sixth annual award to Sir Rudolf Bing, Lee Krasner, and John Houseman. Commemorating the Inaugural Year of the Fine Arts Center, and the growth of the arts at Stony Brook, they were awarded "Distinguished Contributions to Higher

Over 600 people attended the $100-a-plate dinner held at Colonie Hill, which featured music performances an art exhibit, and an impressive display of costumes, all by the undergraduate and graduate students at Stony Brook. Among those present were Acting University President Richard Schmidt, and the three people who presented the awards, Terence Netter, director of the Fine Arts Center, Thaver. SUNY trustee, and Dante Negro, the Fine Arts Center's program director. Former County Executive John Klein presided as Master of Ceremonies.

Bing, an opera impresario, and Krasner, an abstract-expressionist painter, accepted their awards graciously and with few words. Houseman, producer, director, and Academy-Awardwinning actor gave a speech which clearly reflected his views on the state of theater and the

He said he knew of no theatrical center in this country that is not threatened by the "evil axe of inflation." He said there was " a terrible tendency in this country to confuse quantity with quality. Quantity and numbers have become overwhelmingly important — a destructive threat upon all those things that are dear in our cultural lives." He explained that rating television shows, for example, according to number of viewers, is restricting art. Later, in a private conversation, he added that "fundamentally, the artist always gets screwed and at the moment, they are ready to screw the arts royally." At the end of his speech, the audience applauded enthusiastically. For a while it seemed that everyone in the room, wearing "I Love Stony Brook" buttons (courtesy of the foundation), forgot about the possible SUNY budget cuts and was intent on making Stony Brook an established center for the arts.

The Stony Brook Foundation is a non-profit corporation whose members are community, business, and civic leaders from this area as well as academic leaders from the University. It was formed to encourage financial support of University programs, scholarships and loan programs which cannot otherwise be supported by the State budget.

The fund-raising dinner, which began with the Abacus Percussion Ensemble, continued with pianist and composer Stacey Zuckerman, a Stony Brook alumnus. The Graduate Orchestra concluded the feast and performed Stravinsky's "Pulcinella Suite" as the attentive crowd looked Afterwards, as the crowd thinned out, there was dancing to music ranging from the muzak to rock and roll. The evening was diverse and entertaining -a proper salute to the arts.

Oslo, Norway - A floating "hotel" platform with more than 200 North Sea oilfield workers aboard capsized last night and rescuers battled gale-force winds in the darkness to pull men from the towering, frigid waves. Reports said seven persons were known dead.

Authorities said early this morning that 91 persons had been rescued and 65 others were evacuated from a nearby oil production rig by British and Norwegian helicopters, ships and divers fighting winds of up to 80 mph. They said many of the platform surviviors were injured.

Estimates of the number of persons aboard ranged from 208 to 218 and nearly all were said to be Norwegian.

Newark, N.J. - Five Essex County Jail guards were released vesterday after being held hostage for more than 13 hours by inmates who took over two floors of the facility and threatened to throw hostages out of a 10th floor window.

One was taken out of the jail on a stretcher. A sixth hostage, who authorities said was severely beaten, was released Tuesday night.

Another guard was dangled from the window during the incident which involved an estimated 60 inmates.

The siege started at 2:40 P.M. Tuesday after corrections officer James Dubose was shot with a gun smuggled into the 12-story jail.

Another corrections officer, John Belcher, was arrested on charges he smuggled the gun into the jail, said Essex County Prosecutor Donald Coburn.

The captured guards were released as the inmates were transferred to detention cells under a settlement reached by a team of negotiators, including two New York television newsmen.

"At approximately 6:10 A M we finally ended the negotiations and had the last of the hostages brought down," Coburn said.

Washington - President Carter's draft registration plan was pulled back from a scheduled vote in the House Appropriations Committee yesterday after problems arose over the proposed method of paying for it.

"The votes were there overwhelmingly for registration but they thought they were going down the wrong road and the funding plan was a bad precedent," said House Speaking Thomas O'Neill, D-Mass.

The Appropriations Committee will have to find a new way to fund registration. O'Neill said that "almost certainly" will delay action by the full House until after Easter. The administration needs $13.3 million to begin registering young men this summer. Carter's proposal to register women appears dead.

"We've lost some good friends this year. If there is anything I can do in remembrance of a dear friend, I think it is to vote for this bill," said Assemblyman Eugene Levy, R-Rockland, who had opposed the measure in the past.

Levy was referring to Assemblyman Emeel Betros of Poughkeepsie, a onetime heavy smoker who died this year of lung cancer. After his lung cancer was first discovered, Betros led the Assembly in banning smoking in its own chamber.

The proposed smoking ban, which was approved by an 86 to 50 margin in the smoke free Assembly chamber, would require smokers to do their smoking only in specially designated areas of virtually all public places. The proprietor of a restaurant or other public place would be required to designate the no-smoking and smoking areas.

The only places specifically exempted from the ban would be bowling alleys, bars, restaurants seating less than 100 people, small offices, public malls and lobbies. In those places, a smoker could smoke

Professor to Investigate Lawyers

By NATHANIEL RABINOVICH

Stony Brook pre-law advisor Merton Reichler had a rather unpleasant introduction to the American legal system. He failed his first constitutional law course. But if his initial acheivements were less than exemplary, Reichler has since then demonstrated greater capabilities.

A political science professor, Reichler was appointed two weeks ago by the Appellate Division of the New York State Supreme Court to a grievance committee that investigates and prosecutes allegations of professional misconduct among lawyers on Long Island. He was one of four non-lawyers selected to the 20 member committee, which was established in

"I think that there ought to be non-lawyers on the commission judging lawyers' conduct," said Reichler of his selection to the committee, whose other 16 members are lawyers. "I don't believe that any profession's behavior should be judged only by members of that profession." He added that he was quite pleased to learn of his selection.

More than 900 complaints arose against lawyers in Nassau and Suffolk Counties last year, Reichler said, adding that these allegations are part of an overall rise in doubt about the integrity of numerous professions. While he believed that most allegations against lawyers are "probably frivolous," he added, "The next few months may change my mind."

Although Reichler has no formal legal education, he has taught a variety of history and law-related courses at Stony Brook, including "Law and Politics," "Constitutional Law," and several seminar courses. Possessing a Master's Degree in History from Columbia University, he has taught graduates and undergraduates at Stony Brook for the past 18 years. Reichler said he has no difficulty teaching courses in constitutional law, he admitted that he probably "would have been a better teacher" of the practical aspects of the field had he attended law

But if his lack of legal training occasionally hampers his teaching, Reichler suspects that this may be beneficial when advising students about law school. "I don't think lawyers make competent pre-law advisors because they tend to universalize their personal experience," he said, adding that lawyers' experiences may differ widely.

As pre-law advisor, Reichler counsels students on the law school application procedure, as well as their likelihood of admission to various law schools. About 150 students apply annually, he said and "virtually all the people that I counsel" are admitted to at least one law school. That record "g ves me a great sense of satisfaction," said Reichler.

But Reichler scoffed at the suggestion that he was interested mainly in maintaining such a record and keeping his projections to students conservative. "You always try to get long shots on every list," he said, adding that often students are apprehensive about their likelihood of admission to schools he recommends.

In addition, Reichler is the author of planning studies for the proposed Stony Brook Law Center, an idea that has been postponed indefinitely because of state budget cuts.

chairman of the University's Committee on shut."

Academic Standing, a position, he said, that "was probably as good a training" for his recent appointment "as I could think of." Functioning on the committee, which deals with questions about grading and academic dishonesty, required a great deal of objectivity, he explained, a trait he believes will be necessary for his new position. Asked about his role in the committee's decision-making process, Reichler said that, on occasions when a student in one of his classes was involved and questions of conflict Until last September, moreover, Reichler was of interest arose, "I kept my mouth absolutely

Not Worth Waiting on Line For

By MARK L. SCHUSSEL

It was a farce. It was awful. It stunk.

There is perhaps no better way to describe a so-called lecture given by Michael Edelson, an assistant professor in the Art Department, on pornography and eroticism in photography Wednesday night. It was not worth waiting on a 350-person line (of which only 240 were allowed in by a fire marshal) and waiting through a one-hour bomb Edelson, who is in charge of photography at Stony Brook, said he was going to give a lecture and slide show in a "scholarly" and "academic" fashion. But it appeared pornography and eroticism in photography.

From the first slide, a famous Playboy photo of Marilyn Monroe to the last, a dead bird on snow, Edelson failed to seriously address the subject. The only two points he made in a 21/2-hour lecture, was 1) pornography and eroticism has always existed along with sex, and 2) he showed us his own view of what pornography is - the

that he knows very little about atrocities that exist in our world (starvation, war, disease, cruelty, and the like). But there is nothing original behind this because Hustler magazine also holds this philosophy.

Not only didn't he pose any serious questions, but he failed to open the minds of the audience on the subject. Edelson had earlier said while he was not going to resolve the question of what is pomography and what is art in photography, he would at least motivate one to think about this and allow one to make their own decision. Well, it appears that the 240-member audience left with the same closed minds with which they entered the Fine Arts Center Gallery.

He proceeded to show ads for male prostitutes and cock rings, and Playmate data sheets. What relevence do these have to pornography and eroticism in photography?

Edelson's 500 slides, which were set to music, began with pictures of classical phallic symbols and vases showing sex. He then went to oriental prints, erotic book plates, cartoons and finally photographs. By using this progression, he tried to prove that "there is a constant thread that goes through most of the work [from ancient times to today]. People are essentially doing the same thing." He was referring to portraying sex, but he later contradicted himself when he said that sex in ancient times was a lot more open than it is today. At that time, sex was thought of as a regular activity, just like eating which was even performed in the open and not behind closed doors.

For the most part, the photographs, which pretty much appeared chronologically, were diversified. However, we kept waiting to see modern day photography other than pin-ups. This he saved for last, but the saying, "best for last," does not work here. He also got carried away with the pin-ups and his "tribute to Playboy," its gorgeous women and its creator (Hugh Hefner), was a waste of time.

He also made such unnecessary comments as "I'm not trying to shock you." There were no shocks. And he also unnecessarily mentioned how the University Relations office refused to mail out a photo to newspapers, along with a press release on the lecture. Also there was no need for a self-indulgent photo of himself in middle if the slide presentation.

The presentation was filled with technical goofs. Slides were out of focus and out of order, and there were several pauses. There was no excuse for the number of mistakes; he should have made a practice run beforehand.

Carter Proposes $15-Billion Spending Cut

Washington - President Carter yesterday presented his long-awaited plan on balancing the 1981 federal budget to key members of Congress. The proposal calls for $15 billion in spending cuts.

The president's plan, containing few surprises. recommends cuts in all federal departments, including a $1 billion reduction for defense spending from the amount Carter recommended in his original budget submitted in January.

Many of the recommendations closely parallel proposals already made by the House Budget Committee, which last week approved a $2 billion surplus as part of a $611.8 billion budget for fiscal 1981, which starts Oct. 1. The committee's proposal calls for $16.5 billion in spending cuts.

Carter announced his plans to balance the budget in a March 14 speech in which he called for $13 billion to $14 billion in budget cuts as an antiinflation move. However, he delayed making public his list of proposed cuts.

If approved by Congress, it would be the first balanced budget in 12 years. In a related development, Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine, Senate Budget Committee chairman, called for balancing the 1981 budget and simultaneously cutting taxes by $16 billion.

Carter's list was sent to Muskie in a letter from Budget Director James T. McIntyre Jr. The letter was then distributed to other senators and a copy was obtained by the Associated Press.

In the letter, McIntyre said Carter would formally transmit the budget revisions to Congress on Monday and would send specific spending amendments during the week of April 7.

The president's proposal calls for eliminating the $1.7 billion federal revenue sharing program for state However, it recommends adding $500 million for "transitional assistance payments" to cities hit hard by the loss of revenue sharing.

The House was expected to consider adding money for the city aid when the budget reaches the House floor although the House Budget Committee twice defeated the proposal. The committee has also urged elimination of state revenue sharing.

Freedom of Expression

American history has been tarnished by the attempts of some people to curb the rights of others. We, as believers in freedom and the sacredness of our constitutionally guaranteed liberties, cannot condone activities which pose a serious threat to our basic rights.

Such a threat occurred this past week when some narrow-minded people attempted to stop Assistant Professor Edelson's Wednesday night lecture on pornography, and eroticism in photography. Certainly, a free society such as ours must tolerate all beliefs, even this sort of arch-conservatism. But when these, or any other, ideals seriously danger the rights of others, they must be stopped for the good of society as a whole.

Freedom of expression is guaranteed by the First Amendment to the Constitution, and this freedom must be respected. Those people who do not care for the material discussed in Edelson's lecture must not be allowed to mandate to other people that they cannot see or hear what they choose to. Censorship of this sort cannot exist in a free society, for that society is not truly free if rights can be so easily denied.

Last week, University Relations refused to mail nude publicity photographs because they were felt to be "unsuitable." We agree with Edelson that this is an infringement on his academic freedom. Certainly, it is within the legal rights of University Relations to not mail the photo if they so choose, but it is clear that they have no right to pass moral judgements on another's work.

Furthermore, anonymous phone calls that Edelson received, threatening him if he went on with his lecture, as well as a bomb scare that cleared the room at the beginning of the lecture, is a discusting example of the fanaticism that certain people are victims of. It seems somehow contradictory that people would threaten physical violence an act that is clearly against the law — to halt something they feel is wrong.

Finally, the presence of a fire marshal at the lecture to regulate the number of people attending seems ordinary enough. But when was the last time you saw a fire marshal turn people away from an event? It seems that limited censorship was being imposed under the auspices of law.

Censorship is an ugly practice.

Remember Hostages

The Iranian Revolutionary Council's most recent proposal, that the 50 American hostages be tried as spies if the Shah is not returned to Iran, is an interesting one. But not because of its content — this threat has been made before — but because of the apparent disregard by many Americans and many American newspapers.

It seems apparent that we have all put the Iranian hostage crisis somewhere in the back of our minds. And, as the number of days that our fellow citizens have been held increases, so does our acceptance of the situation.

We urge that no one forget or even slightly downplay the Iranian situation. Surely, if we forget about the plight of our troubled fellow Americans, they are doomed. It is only our hoping, our constant speaking up for their welfare, that may, hopefully, free them soon.

Correction

In the article, "Statesman Gets Stoned," which appeared in Wednesday's issue, it was inaccurately reported that a Campus Security officer told an editor to "call back in 15 minutes" after the editor telephoned Security to report that the window to Statesman's newsroom was broken. In fact, the officer said that Security was changing shifts at that time and an officer would arrive at the scene in 15 minutes.

Healthy Bodies And Healthy Minds At Local Gym

By CATHY DELLICARPINI

Flesh and metal rise and fall in perfect synchronization. strength of both is so similar that if not for the profuse perspiring of one, it would be hard to distinguish it from the other. They are fighting for superiority, a struggle involving long and arduous routines. Eventually, it becomes clear to observer and participant which will triumph and subdue. The weights are not altered, but the human muscle tissue is strained, molded and stretched. Why would anyone endure such extensive punishment? Why, particularly, would a man who doctors have warned would not be able to walk by the time he is 45 if he continues to do what he is doing, devote his life to "pumping iron"?

Neil Dietrichson, co-owner and promising entrepreneur of Neil's Gym in St. James, a popular spot among many Stony Brook students. has and will continue to aggravate his physical condition because he is a "serious bodybuilder." The sacrifices that characterize his lifestyle, indeed his profession, are not even minor deterrents. "I love it, I can't stop," he said. "I would never want to go back to normal."

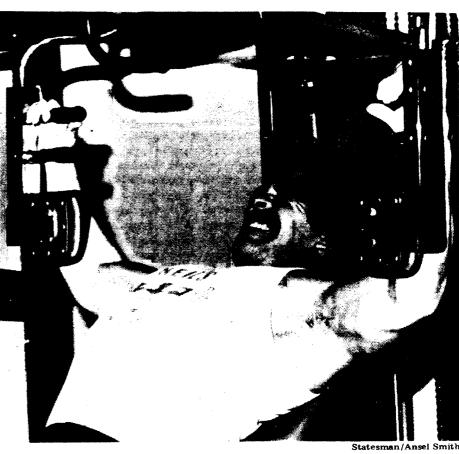

Dietrichson didn't always have a a 5 foot, 10 inch, 205 pound frame. He was once "normal," with arms and legs that looked like "four chicken necks." What inspired him to change was not a desire to be the proverbial bully on the beach or ir-drummer. Dietrichson had been a percussionist for 14 years before a friend suggested that he try lifting weights to increase his speed and coordination. "After one work-out I was hooked," he said. Now, at 24, he is a successful businessman (the 21/2 year old gym has 1,300 members, with plans for expansion underway) as well as a "hulking" competitive bodybuilder.

The most difficult sacrifices he has had to make are characteristic of building a competitive physique. Dietrichson, as well as many others, prepares 11/2 years in advance for a single competition. Six months before a contest, he will discard his usually nutritious diet of 7,000 calories a day, and eat nothing but proteins. Boiled chicken and protein shakes are his sustenance for what seems like a masochistic last

Most competitors become extremely irritable and delirious during this stage and Dietrichson has admittedly lost many friends because of it. Limiting one's nutritional intake so severely can gravely affect one's mental and physical health. Any chemical imbalance is intensified by steroids and hormones taken weeks before competi-50 inch chest, a 29 inch waist, and tion in a final attempt to shave fat, push the muscles to the surface and add definition or "cuts" to the physique. Dietrichson has known contestants to acquire baldness, sterility and other permanent damage as a direct result of competitive resistible playboy, but a more able narcotics. He has recently decided Statesman

Dietrichson has been accused of forcing his own members to the point of vomiting or exhaustion. He admits that sometimes he feels it is necessary in order to instill the proper respect for the equipment training. Normally, Dietrichson assures, working out increases powers of concentration and agility, and produces a calm and less aggressive nature. "I let all my frustrations out on the machines," he said. "If somebody were to insult me, I would just brush it off. But if he hits me, I'll kill him."
