Barnes Plans to File Countersuit

By Mary Lou Lang

Gary Barnes, director of Public Safety, said that opposing papers will be filed in response to a suit alleging that he received over $11,000 for 51 days he was absent from work and did not claim on his time sheets.

According to Barnes, the state attorney's office will represent all the defendants in the suit. Aside from himself, University President John Marburger, Former Vice President for Campus Operations Robert Francis, Director of Internal Auditing Carl Singler, and Comptroller of New York State Edward Regan are also named in the suit.

"We will be denying everything in the suit," Barnes said, when opposing papers are filed.

The suit filed against the state of New York, which includes the employees of Stony Brook, requests that the state be restored $11,106.51 - the funds which Barnes allegedly received which he should not have.

Kevin Paukner, a public safety officer, filed the suit as a taxpayer of New York. Barnes claimed that Paukner is a "disgruntled employee," but would not elaborate.

Paukner was suspended from the Public Safety Department in 1986, after he arrested a University Hospital nurse. The charges against the nurse were dropped and Paukner challenged his suspension. He was suspended for a total of six weeks, but was reinstated in the department after an arbitrator's decision cited conflicting evidence in the case.

Paukner is currently working in the department but no longer has his peace officer status - he is unable to make arrests.

Joseph Gagliardo, Paukner's attorney, said that the attorney general's office requested additional time to respond to the suit. Gagliardo has requested an investigation by the office. He said that he has allowed them an extension until March 11 to respond.

"The fact that the state is being sued for releasing the money, and the state is also the beneficiary of the suit," Gagliardo said, makes the suit a bit unusual.

Gagliardo said that he anticipates that a separate counsel from the attorney general's office will be appointed to represent Barnes.

The evidence in the case, according to Gagliardo, includes signed affidavits from three employees or former employees of the Public Safety Department, copies of appointment books which were maintained on part of Barnes and memos. Gagliardo said that the evidence corroborates on the allegations against Barnes.

Gagliardo charged that Barnes is conducting his own internal investigation of the suit. Barnes denied the charge and said that if there is an investigation being conducted that he is unaware of it.

"I am personally concerned with the well being of current employees that work in the Public Safety Department that they are not harassed by this," Gagliardo said. He added that those employees will be protected the New York State Whistle Blowers Law.

Pamela Williams, one of the attorneys assigned to the case, said that the attorney general's office is waiting to receive all the papers from the plaintiff.

Senate Looks to Pare Polity

Statesman Andrew Mohan

Paul Rubenstein and Jacques Dorcely at the Polity Senate meeting Tuesday night.

By Drew Mitty

Polity Vice President Paul Rubenstein recommended dissolving Polity's Council and increasing the role of the legislative presidents in Polity at a Senate meeting Tuesday night.

"Our structure under the present constitution can be improved to make our government more flexible, representative, and fair," Rubenstein said.

Rubenstein suggested that all residence hall college legislative presidents, which comprise the Senate, should be elected in the Spring during the regular Student Polity election.

Polity President Jacques Dorcely asked for the Senate's support for all his projects, one of which is the organization of a University Awareness Day. Dorcely said a day this semester with a "friendly and festive atmosphere" in which students could learn more about Polity would rally student support for the organization.

Dorcely appealed for student support again after disclosing that the $30,000 requested by SUNY Stony Brook for renovations in the Stony Brook Student Union had not been allocated in the SUNY budget. Students should urge their parents to write to their state senators to have the funds for these improvements reinstated, Dorcely said. He added that Polity should make students aware of the importance of their protest in this matter.

Freshman Class Representative Brian James said that the prevailing sentiment of the students was that there is a definite lack of library hours available to them on Friday and Saturday evenings.

Vice President Rubenstein attributed this problem to the inadequate wage that is paid to work/study students in the library. "If you could work at McDonald's and make $6.50 an hour, why would you want to work in the library?"

Lisa Garcia Polity Treasurer and former PSC treasurer said that last semester, attempts were made by the PSC to open a 24-hour lounge for students in the library's basement, but "the administration decided to convert the space that we wanted into a faculty lounge, that was how they answered our problem."

Also discussed at the Senate meeting:

The Bookstore Advisory Committee spoke of its plans to put pressure on the Barnes and Noble Bookstore Concession to reduce textbook prices by 10% and triple the number of used books that are available to help curtail students' expenses.

Senator Ray Haight was voted into the vacant PSC seat.

NYPIRG's Coordinator Lisa Olshen informed the Senate of the NYPIRG's Spring Conference Weekend in Albany which will provide interested students the chance to participate in a work on waste organization and other projects. Students can find dates, times, and costs of the event posted in the Union.

Junior Class Representative Dan Rubin reported that he is working with the ledges and committees on changing and clarifying teacher evaluation forms. He stressed that, "the old evaluations don't really tell students if the teacher is really bad or even if the teacher speaks English."

Wall Street's Ins and Outs

By Irwin M. Goldberg

While many students studying law try to get to Wall Street, the members of Stony Brook at Law and Phi Alpha Delta brought a lawyer from Wall Street to campus Wednesday night.

Clifford Schecter, a corporate lawyer on Wall Street who specializes in taxes, spoke mainly on how to get a job on Wall Street and what one could expect when arriving there.

Schecter said one could expect to find salaries from $75,000 to upwards of $200,000. However, he cautioned students, "Don't be blinded by the dollar sign."

According to Schecter, the people receiving those salaries often "give up their families", working 60 hours or more during the week.

Although the field is a highly competitive one, there are jobs out there, Schecter said. He mentioned that its no longer "who you know", but "how well you know them."

In reply to a question asked by a student, Schecter said that if one didn't know anybody, their success would depend largely on how well they did in law school. He emphasized that being successful does not only depend on grades, but also how active a student was in school. He said that participating in extra-curricular activities also can enhance one's chances of success on Wall Street.

Schecter said that one activity which can boost one's chances is publishing in a law journal.

Concerning the topic of law school, Schecter said that it is "a direct function of what one puts into it." In addition, he said that the LSAT exam has nothing to do with how good a lawyer one will be.

During the discussion, Schecter made a comparison to the television show, "L.A. Law". "Wall Street law is similar to 'L.A. Law', but there is not as much glitter." He said that there is, however, a lot of

Scientists and Students Honor Black Achievers

By Peter Ayiward

The Dean's Office in the Department of Engineering and Applied Sciences sponsored a program Tuesday night in honor of National Black History Month which allowed students to make presentations honoring past achievements of black scientists.

Two prominent black scientists from Long Island - Otto White from Brookhaven National Laboratory and Keith Watkins from NYU College of Dentistry - also spoke at the program about minorities in the science field.

The groups representing SUNY Stony Brook were Minorities in Medicine, Scholastic Achievement Incentives for Non-Traditional Students and Minorities in Engineering and Applied Sciences. A group of students from South County High School also participated in the program. The group was the only high school group to compete although several were invited.

Each group made a report pertaining to black scientists and at the end of the program awards were distributed to the best presentation.

The South County group won the award in the high school category and Minorities in Medicine from Stony Brook won the best exhibit in the college competition.

The other campus groups were also awarded on merit of good presentations and each received money from the program contributions for their scholarship funds.

White, associate division head of the Safety and Environmental Division at Brookhaven Laboratory said, "Continue to participate in minority groups. Participate in the mainstream of programs in addition to your network."

He also said that he feels black professionals have more demands placed on them since they are minorities in many fields and they must represent the larger minority not in the professional field.

The second speaker, Watkins, is a dentist at Veterans Administration Hospital in Manhattan as well as a clinical assistant professor at NYU. He concentrated his discussion on the aspects dealing with the further development of black scientists and minorities in general.

Watkins outlined guidelines for success, which include hard work, sacrificing oneself at times, and liking one's work. He said that several social factors blacks must contend with are lack of good primary and secondary schools for urban blacks, lack of role models, negative peer pressure, and "the fact that we like to party too much." He said that all these factors contribute to stagnation of the black minorities.

Students Arrested After Opposing CIA Recruits

By the College Press Service

Eight SUNY at Albany students were charged with trespassing for staging a sit-in to protest a Central Intelligence Agency recruiter's presence on campus.

The eight were part of a larger group of about 75 students from SUNY-Albany, Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, Union College, Hobart College, SUNY Buffalo, SUNY Purchase and the University of Rhode Island who turned out to block the CIA recruitment Feb. 8.

A weekend national meeting at Rutgers University in New Jersey, an Albany lecture by former CIA agent John Stockwell the day before, and an allegedly broken promise fueled student anger at the CIA's recruiting, sources said.

Demonstrators demanded the release of "The Albany Three," students arrested during an October, 1987 CIA visit to the campus, and asserted administrators had promised them they would stall CIA recruiting until SUNY Albany reviewed its policy.

Vice President Mitchell Livingston, demonstrator Danella Korotzer said, had promised in October that "the CIA will not be allowed to be on this campus until the issue is cleared up."

"The issue was put before a committee, and they came out with a view that it would be inappropriate to change our policy," said

President Vincent O'Leary.

Some of the students, fresh from the Rutgers meeting where about 700 students from around the country gathered to try to coordinate nationwide campus leftist activities and where anti-CIA sentiments ran high, held a rally denouncing CIA "crimes," marched outside Livingston's office, and then occupied O'Leary's office.

"We have a duty under the Nuremberg Principal (which held people are legally obliged not to follow 'immoral' orders) to try to prevent crimes against humanity being carried out by the CIA," explained student Kathy Manley.

"We want the CIA off our campus," because SUNY is "complicit" in CIA activities subversion in other parts of the world, added student Nick Schneur.

University police arrested the protesters when they refused to leave O'Leary's office after closing hours.

Students who had job interviews did get to talk with the CIA official, who was somewhat hidden away at the remote Alumni House. The prospective CIA employees, however, had to be escorted to their interviews by police.

No injuries were reported, but several demonstrators complained of being picked up by police and thrown into the snow.

Activists Fight CIA Recruiters

By the College Press Service

College activists across the country, who have long rallied to keep Central Intelligence Agency officials from recruiting on their campuses, now seem to be trying to make the agency the major focus of their political energies.

At a meeting of 600-some activists from around the country at Rutgers University in New Jersey Feb. 5-7, for example, students pledged to re-organize national anti-CIA rallies at campuses April 23.

A few days later, on Feb. 8, students from five colleges around Albany, N.Y., protested recruiters at SUNY Albany.

During January and fall term, students at the universities of North Carolina at Charlotte, Washington, Vermont, New Hampshire, Iowa, Minnesota, California-Los Angeles and Santa Barbara, as well as at Brown University, demonstrated against the spy agency.

Activists say the success of the anti-apartheid movement on U.S. campuses and increased publicity about the CIA's subversive role in Central America have moved some students to take on a new cause.

"The divestment movement has slowed a bit because most major universities have divested," said Marc D. Kenen, a University of Massachusetts graduate student and opponent of CIA recruiting at the Amherst campus. "The issues are very much related."

"They both have to do with university complicity with illegal and immoral actions, whether it be the CIA involvement in Central America and Southern Africa or U.S. government support of the South African regime."

"CIA links with apartheid are alive and well," Carol Thompson, a University of Southern California associate professor told a November Los Angeles anti-CIA crowd of about 50 people, noting that CIA swaps information with South Africa's intelligence agency.

Critics charge the CIA has helped topple duly-elected governments in nations such as Chile and Guatemala, and promotes terrorism through its support of rebels in Central American and Africa.

"The CIA should not exist at all because they've proven they can't stay within their legal limits," said Ohio State alumnus Rick Theis during a November campus rally.

The agency's role in the Iran-contra scandal also has fueled anti-CIA activism, which first appeared in the 1960s as a result of U.S. military intervention in Southeast Asia, Cuba, and the Dominican Republic. But it has only been in recent years — and particularly in recent months — that the anti-CIA movement really has blossomed on campuses.

"Anybody who watched television this summer knows the CIA is behind the contra war. They are the ones that are training the contras in terrorist tactics," Western Michigan University minister Donald Van Hoeven told protesters at a recent demonstration.

At Louisiana State, students planted a mock graveyard outside the schools' career placement center, complete with crosses bearing the names of people killed by CIA-supported Nicaraguan rebels. At Brown, a 200-member group called CIAO — CIA Off Campus — checked out books from the university library that the agency helped finance or write.

The CIA isn't retreating. "The First Amendment grants them the right to say what they want, and the First Amendment also grants us the right to recruit on campus. We are a legitimate employer of the U.S. government," said Sharon Foster, a spokeswoman for the agency.

Most schools agree. "Students want them here," said Jerry Houser of Southern Cal's Career Development Center. "The CIA has received a very good response from USC students. They've been here for years."

At Colby College in Maine, students objected to a November Faculty Senate resolution to keep the CIA off campus, claiming, as campus College Republicans Chairman John Whitacre put it, "it's pedantic of the professor to try and decide for us, to become our conscience. It's our choice to take (the CIA) up on it or not."

"The CIA was here as a potential employer of our students and alumni, and we normally provide space and the opportunity for interviews for those who have positions for our graduates," said Henry Johnson, vice president for student services at the University of Michigan, the site of a recent protest.

Activists, though, claim credit for the CIA cancelling recruiting visits to the University of Colorado and Brown, where past demonstrations have been particularly hostile.

The agency also suffered a setback at the University of California-Santa Barbara, after a November protest that resulted in the arrests of 38 students who opposed the appointment of a CIA officer to a temporary faculty position.

Progress Made With Minorities

By the College Press Service

Moving to end 20 years of trying to force ten, mostly southern, states to desegregate their state colleges, the U.S. Dept. of Education approved of the "substantial progress" they'd made in bringing minorities into their campus systems.

U.S. Secretary of Education William Bennett, at a Washington, D.C. news conference Feb. 10, said four states — Arkansas, North Carolina, South Carolina and West Virginia — were finally in "full compliance" with civil rights laws the federal government had been trying to force them to follow since 1969, when it sued ten states that kept their campuses racially segregated.

Bennett gave six other states — Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Missouri, Oklahoma and Virginia — until the end of 1988 to tell how they'll complete specific projects — mostly building improvement and funding of minority student recruiting efforts — to rid themselves of "the remnants of segregation."

In its 1969 legal assault on states that still segregated their colleges, the federal government won the right to cut off funds to states that failed to integrate their campuses.

Various courts imposed deadlines through the years for schools to desegregate but, while occasionally approving some state efforts, kept giving other states more time to meet the desegregation goals.

Last week, Bennett readily conceded none of the states had met the goals a federal court set for the states in 1978: to enroll more minority students at traditionally white campuses, hire more minority teachers and administrators and improve facilities at historically black campuses.

Yet "all of the ten states have made significant and substantial progress in desegregating their systems of public higher education," Bennett said in effectively calling off federal pressure on the states.

"Each has done all or most of what it committed to do," including spending an estimated $240 million to renovate historically black colleges, Bennett said.

Not everyone, apparently, is convinced.

Even the week before Bennett made his announcement, American Council on Education President Robert Atwell complained colleges have "hit the wall" in their efforts to integrate.

"Our own inner fatigue," Atwell said Feb. 2, "has been accentuated by an administration that has not seen equity issues as important."

He blasted the "steady downturn" in the number of black students in colleges as evidence of "backsliding," not progress.

Black student enrollment nationwide actually has declined in recent years, the Dept. of Education's own figures suggest, and scores of public campuses — the University of New Hampshire, Farleigh Dickenson, Penn State, Mississippi State, Tennessee, Nebraska and the California State University system, among others — have launched new minority student recruiting drives to meet their integration goals this schoolyear.

On Feb. 1, moreover, the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges called on two-year campuses nationwide to the "crisis" of "declining educational participation and opportunities for minority students."

Drug Testing is the Residue of Reaganism

As job searches begin, some of Stony Brook's seniors will be doing a little more than shopping for the right suit and getting resumes printed up. Under the encouragement of the Reagan Administration most American corporations have comfortably settled into the habit of giving drug and alcohol tests. Whether heading for Wall Street or Walgreen's, Stony Brook seniors will come to regard March and April as the months of abstinence.

Poll after poll shows drug abuse leveling off or actually going down, but this country continues its mysterious anti-drug obsession. While the crack problem is obviously rampant, the inner-city kids who fall victim to the cocaine derivative are obviously not the ones being interviewed by IBM — which the current government doesn't consider a national crisis at all.

The employee drug tests represent an interesting part of Reagan's America. Aside from student-aid cuts, the tests are just about the only time that America's white, upper middle-class youth will actually feel the brunt of Reaganism on their lives. While strictly a corporate decision, the tests were suggested, heralded and lobbied for by Reagan's Justice Department. Anti-drug hysteria is a natural outgrowth of the conservatism that the administration has fostered in America over the last seven years. That conservatism often hit the country's 30 million poor in form of budget cuts. But now, albeit in a lesser fashion, it strikes to the heart of many of Reagan's young and upwardly mobile neo-supporters.

The temptation to be spiteful would be overwhelming if not for two factors: The disgusting invasion of privacy the urine tests represent and the defeat they represent for the principled sector that has always stood against Reaganism's throwbacks.

The tests allow employers not to detect a drug or alcohol problem, but to discriminate on a basis of lifestyle. Ingesting drugs is not illegal — possession and intoxicated behavior are. No one can be arrested for inhaling on a joint at a party, but under the reasoning of the tests one can be denied a job for doing it. Allowing potential employers to learn what their applicants may or may not have done two weekends ago is not only a breach into someone's life but a ridiculous basis for judging someone's morality and capability.

While most companies are subjecting only new employees to the test, the door is now open for employers to run random checks for drugs. It's understandable for companies to want to test employee capability, but why not test employees on what they're paid to do? Put a pilot on a flight simulator, give an accountant a theoretical exam — but leave their personal lives and problems to them.

Wouldn't life be easy if we could detect everything about a person through a little test. Should companies regularly give lie detector tests to see if applicants have ever committed a crime? How about a stress test to see how well they'll perform when the heat is on? A blood test for AIDS? Hypnosis to detect nasty little secrets?

While temporary abstinence is a way around drug tests, it's also a rather insidious result of them. The tests force an artificial "just say no" dogma by scaring people into losing a potential job. They coerce job searchers into shifting their lifestyles.

Employers are not supposed to be a de facto drug squad. Leave drug enforcement to the police and drug counseling centers. Employers have a right to judge job performance — not to pry into someone's past and possibly manipulate his future.

The Admin's Handling of Javits is Suspicious

By Stephanie Good

The fire at the Jacob Javits Lecture Center at Stony Brook University has created a lot of controversy over the past year and a half. At risk of being called obsessed with the issue or probably even worse, I am continuing what has been a long and very hard fight to see that the right steps are taken to ensure the safety of the building.

My involvement with issue stems from two distinct yet completely different origins. The first is that I was attending classes in the Javits Center four days a week during the time of the fire. I became extremely ill, along with many other students and staff members, and am still suffering what I believe are the effects of the chemicals that I was exposed to. My second reason for such a strong involvement with this issue is that same reason that I am attending school at the age of 37. I have a very strong sense of the word justice. I believe very much in the law, especially where human rights are concerned and in this case I believe that people's rights have been severely violated. My goal is to become a lawyer and people who have known me all of my life never had any doubt that I would reach that goal.

One of the unfortunate occurrences of this issue has been the constant attacks that have been aimed at the New York Public Interest Research Group (NYPIRG). What many people don't know, however, is that the two people who are mainly responsible for this issue going as far as it has are students who became ill in Javits after the fire. David DeLucia, a chemistry student at the time, brought his concerns to NYPIRG and many other campus groups and faculty members. He drew the interest of the NYPIRG project coordinator, Richard Drury, who was at our Stony Brook office while he was working on a thesis related to the creation of dioxin during certain types of fires. He and David had a good understanding of the chemistry involved. At the same time, I went to NYPIRG to find out information about the fire and the result was a union of three people who worked together to make sure that Javits was safe. When Rich Drury left for Yale Law School last summer, I replaced him as NYPIRG's representative on Dr. Marburger's Ad Hoc Committee on Javits. This was because I had developed an understanding of the issue that was hard to match by most people on campus. I understood the test results, I could differentiate between the various types of dioxins and furans and knew which were the most hazardous. I knew where test samples had come from and which of those samples showed what levels of dioxins and/or furans. In other words, I knew what I was talking about. For me, and also for Dave, who had spent eight years as a paramedic, this was not a "NYPIRG" issue, it was the issue of every person who had to enter the Javits Lecture Center without knowing if it was safe.

The Javits controversy has blossomed, not due to NYPIRG's insistence on exaggerating the issue, as has been said, but due to the Administration's lack of credibility that was created by their admitted mistakes shortly after the fire. Yet, while they have admitted their wrongs, they have failed to instill a sense of confidence in many of the people who are closely involved with the issue. This is due to the administration's continuing contradictory actions and statements that have made them appear suspicious. While each incident by itself may not be earth shattering, taken in aggregate, there is a distinct pattern that cannot be dismissed without question. One point that concerns me the most is the University's position that none of the more toxic Tetra and Penta chlorinated dibenzofurans were found outside of the original ventilation system sample. This statement was also made by the expert panel members in their interim report which led to the opening of part of Javits last fall. The test results clearly show these chemicals to be present in samples that were taken only in room 102, but also in the main corridor. Anyone who can read English would see this. The University also contends that the bags that they sealed the contaminated materials in remained intact and never broke open while being removed from room 108 and thrown into trucks. Not only do I have photographs of the bags breaking and soot and debris falling out, but so does a reporter that was also present during this occurrence. Another point to be mentioned is the fact that the university had promised, for the sake of credibility, to allow NYPIRG to view all for the testing that was to be done regarding Javits. However, in many instances, NYPIRG was not notified as to the time and place of sampling in order to be present, in spite of their daily calls to Environmental Health and Safety.

Judy Hayward, assistant director of environmental health and safety at the University, says that NYPIRG has been unable to refute the results of dioxin testing and thus has sought to discredit the university staff involved. This type of statement is one that has been used a lot to divert attention away from what NYPIRG is really saying. We have never tried to refute test results. The position that we have always maintained is that the University has conveniently limited themselves to doing comprehensive testing in only three lecture halls while there is sufficient reason to indicate that further testing of the remain in lecture halls is necessary to scientifically determine the safety of Javits. Members of the administration have continuously reached far beyond the issue of Javits to attack members of NYPIRG and NYPIRG as an organization to draw attention away from their inadequate handling of the situation. And, while it is true that Rich Drury agreed to the testing that was done, he also says that he never at any time during his tenure on the Ad Hoc Committee was given any reason to believe that the testing methods or sites that were used were the final analysis to be done. He said that they were used to determine a further need for testing.

If Dr. Marburger feels comfortable leaving three quarters of Javits without the comprehensive testing that was done in the one quadrant, then I suppose that we will all have to live with his decision. If he chooses to use the expert panel to support his decision, then I would have to wonder how those three people can sleep at night knowing that they don't have sufficient data to make a scientific determination on the safety of the entire building. Only two of them have seen Javits and that was ten months after the fire when most of the worst contamination was being hidden by paint. One of those people stated that Environmental Health and Safety had done a "piss-poor" job of testing and that they had very limited data to work with. He commended Rich Drury and NYPIRG for pushing the administration to test further than they had originally wanted to. Yet, the building has opened and the expert panel members appear to endorse that move.

Stony Brook University professor, Dr. Theodore D. Goldfarb, was quoted in Newsday on February 18, 1988 as saying that the Environmental Protection Agency has conveniently found reasons to lower its cancer risk estimate for dioxin. He also lends strong support to the feeling that politics, not science, is in command at our principal U.S. environmental agency. If politics can take charge on such a high level, then certainly it could even more easily influence the decisions of people involved with a state-run university, especially if that state is considering one of their top level politicians for a presidential candidate.

I never have to enter Javits again. I am not a paid employee of NYPIRG, nor do I, or have I ever received college credits for my work on this issue from them. This is also true for Dave DeLucia. We just have the problem of "knowing too much" to let the issue be put to rest until the proper testing is done.

Campus Jobs Offer Much

By Gerard Brandenstein

Within each happening in our lives there is an obstacle to overcome and an experience to be savored. Within the boundary of this university lies the potential for almost every student to get worthwhile employment in an area they feel they may want to enter upon graduation.

From the Health Science Center to the Math Tower, the Gymnasium to South Campus lies literally hundreds of jobs for students and students only. From semester to semester many of them lay vacant or dormant. The experience that can be gained from these positions are as innumerable as the number of students that hold them. Some of the students view the benefits as strictly economical or financial. The money, in one freshman's view, allows him to "go to more parties; and basically have a better time." One senior views her four year experience in the Administration Building as "something that will look very well on an application for a future job" or for graduate studies.

Many of the other jobs may offer students emotional or personal support. A true sense of belonging or "being a part" of something could turn around the outlook of many students who feel lost or floundering. From my own personal experience, being one of those students who felt lost, or floundering, I can truly say that the people I work with, faculty, staff, and students, have changed my outlook on this university. It no longer retains that cold, non-emotional sense it once had, when I was a commuting freshman. The university now retains a true collegiate spirit. A knowledge of the way the system works, its ins and outs will be what I will take from my employment experience here. The people I have met, if only second hand, and those I have established a friendship with have proven to be true professionals in every respect.

The Director of Personnel for a major Long Island defense manufacturer said "any prolonged experience in a professional atmosphere makes you qualified over every person who flipped hamburgers at the local hamburger joint, or for that matter any 'Assistant Manager' at the Mall, it is my belief that they are all Assistant Managers".

The commitment that you have to make to the position may be as minimal as ten to fifteen hours a week, usually within walking distance of your dorm. When you take into consideration the opportunity cost of already being here, at the University, why would you want to go any other place to work.

U.S.: Supporting Murderers

By John Saudino

Mr. Lutas, I must say that your viewpoint, "U.S. Duty in Latin America," in Statesman Feb. 11, though carefully written, was so rife with obfuscations, false dichotomies, and deceptions that I hardly know where to begin.

Besides chortling militaristic absurdities such as "... sending in the Marines may solve the present crisis," you propagandize with that time honored right wing tactic of discrediting any government that you dislike by labeling it with that most ominous and blood curdling of -isms; "totalitarianism." The fact that in private you refer to the popularly elected democratic government of Salvador Allende in Chile as an example of "totalitarianism" that has been benevolently "rooted out" by the U.S. reviles the full absurdity of your sloppy sloganeering use of the word I'm sure that the 50,000 Chilenos who were systematically rounded up, slaughtered after the "rooting out of totalitarianism" would have appreciated your analysis!

You claim that this "totalitarianism" is a form of government that is "qualitatively" different from what you call "authoritarianism." However, the only differences that can be seen between what you call "totalitar-ianism" in Cuba and "authoritarianism" (or even Democracy sic) in El Salvador is that, besides the far greater repression in El Salvador, the people of Cuba are all fed, housed, clothed, treated medically, and educated to a literacy rate far greater than the United States. Much the same could be true for "totalitarian" Nicaragua if the volunteer technicians, doctors, and teachers in the rural areas were not being continuously murdered by your beloved "freedom fighters!"

In addition to the above mentioned deceptions, you propagate in your article an unfortunately popular myth namely the false perception that U.S. intervention in Latin America and elsewhere exists merely as a response to "Soviet expansion." The fact is the United States was intervening, meddling, and invading other countries long before the Soviet Union was even established in 1917. The invasions of Nicaragua by admiral Walker in 1850, the invasion of Cuba in 1902, the invasion of Haiti 1905, Mexico 1911, the Dominican Republic 1915, as well as the invasion of Nicaragua which established the brutal Samosa dynasty, were all invasions of sovereign countries. Some of these invasions, as in the case of Cuba and Nicaragua, were followed by

Insure Student Safety: Install Core Locks

By Nicole Motz

How safe are students at Stony Brook ... I wonder? Automatic lock doors don't automatically lock, doors are propped open, and the front entrance to all buildings are always accessible to intruders. Due to the present situation of the dorms, security does not exist.

For example, on December 21 of last semester a young man went about assaulting women in both G and H-quads while they were in the showers (Myself being one of these women). Since the man was not initially caught, his crimes escalated, and he went from assaulting women to the attempted rape of two women over intercession. Another incident, unknown to the student body at large occurred last year when three men accosted a woman in the resident hall showers. Early one morning they snuck into the shower, ripped down the curtain while deliberately spraying scalding hot water upon her. Imagine the detrimental psychological effects on the victims of these extremely violating acts.

As we all know through the newspapers and by word of mouth, there have been numerous other accounts of vandalism, rapes, and assaults on campus. Security must be tighter! There is absolutely no reason why core locks cannot be put on all doors in the buildings. These core locks will allow residents to use their room keys to enter, and will put an end to the propping open of doors by students. This will also make visitors that would like to enter a building the opportunity of only using the front door, where eventually there will be twenty-four hour security watch desks.

"Early one morning they snuck into the shower, ripped down the curtain while deliberately spraying scalding hot water on her."

According to Susan Riseling, assistant director for public safety, it has come to my attention that public safety is a strong advocate of the twenty-four hour security system which they feel will take effect in the near future. From a students point of view, there appears to be little or no movement towards establishing anything more than the already existing 9 p.m.-3 a.m. per day security watch system. In light of recent campus disturbances and violence, (Remember the shootings last year!), it must be clear that this system is not sufficient to secure students safety. Until the twenty-four hour security watch system in each building is in effect, cautious and careful assessment must be made in terms of the presently existing lock systems. At this point in time anyone can easily enter any building by merely opening a door. It is ludicrous that a key is not necessary to gain access to one's building.

To put things in perspective, do residents in the Village of Stony Brook leave the front doors of their homes open? No, I think not. It is deeply saddening to me that there has such a lack of responsibility towards ensuring students safety and peace of mind, especially in a state-run school. What is it going to take? Do we need to wait for someone to be killed? I hope not.

long term occupations by U.S. troops. All of this occurred before there existed the alleged "threat of Communism" that supposedly justifies our present day aggressions. The above mentioned invasions, having nothing whatever to do with Communism, are, much like today's interventions, a product of an expansionist foreign policy, not the desire to stop "totalitarian expansion."

If you, Michael Lutas and others like you, were truly sincere about what you called in your viewpoint our "... moral duty because of our past involvement," if you really wanted to make amends for all the blood baths perpetrated by the United States throughout this century and the last, you would stop backing the murderous rampages of Pinchet, of El Salvador's death squads, of the heirs to Duvalier, and of the Contras.

Everyone has the right to run for president, but I have the right not to vote for them.

QUESTION
Is it appropriate for religious leaders such as Jesse Jackson and Pat Robertson to run for President?

Yes, It's not a matter of their religion, it's what they could do for this country and what they believe in and their qualifications.

Hal Maston

That religion and politics should never mix never applied even in the first centuries with the Pharisees and Sadducees so I guess it does not make any difference.

Gina Grenci
Sophmore, Political Science

I don't believe that guiding a T.V. ministry or congregation are enough qualifications to guide the country and give the leadership that we need.

Diane Rosenberg
Junior, Biology

I think it's appropriate for them to run as long as they keep their religious beliefs apart from ruling the country, they should not intermingle them.

David Fields
Junior, Computer Science

I find it appropriate for Jesse Jackson to be running for president but not Pat Robertson. Jackson is more of an inspirational leader for his community. Pat Robertson is basically a fool. Anybody who asks for five million dollars or else he is going to die from God — i wouldn't trust for president.

Lynn Candia

I am a firm believer in separation of church and state as was laid out in the constitution. I think a religious leader would jeopardize that separation.

Red Alert: Beast of the East

By Dan Daley

Wake up baseball fans! Spring training is under way. This year's spring training marks the end of a long baseball off-season filled with the movement of high-priced free agents and owners wheeling and dealing. Jack Clark, the cream of the free agent crop, traded in his Cardinal uniform for Yankee pinstripes.

The signing of Clark made for a happy day in Yankeeville and makes New York a big favorite to win the American League East. Yankee fans across the land are anxiously awaiting the '88 Bomber assault.

Let's face it, the Yankees now have more talent up and down the bench than George Steinbrenner has at building ships. When guys like Gary Ward, Claudell Washington, and newly acquired Roy Smalley will be searching for spots in the lineup, its scary how much offense this team can produce.

The 1988 edition of "Murderers Row" starts off with superman Rickey Henderson. Rickey's kryptonite last year was a strained hamstring. His "hammy", as he liked to call it, turned a potential MVP campaign into a year of people questioning his desire as a ballplayer. Teammates accused Rickey of "dogging it", nevertheless a healthy Henderson is the best leadoff man in baseball.

Co-captain Willie Randolph, who will most likely bat second, boasts one of the best eyes in baseball. Randolph's patience at the plate will give Henderson plenty of time to wreck havoc on the basepaths. Following Randolph is all-star, gold-glove first baseman Don Mattingly. Mattingly, who recently signed a 3-year contract worth up to 7 million dollars, showed confidence and leadership when he did his best Joe Namath impersonation by boldly predicting the Yankees would grab the A.L. flag.

Sky's the limit this year for Clark in the clean-up spot. Clark lead the National League in walks last year but can't be pitched around with perennial 100 plus RBI man Dave Winfield batting fifth. Winfield has 100 or more RBI's in his last six seasons. Continuing the wall-banger brigade is third-baseman Mike Pagliarulo who hit 32 home runs last year and adds even more muscle to the lineup.

The only question mark is their pitching. The signing of John Candelaria and the development of hard-throwing rookie Al Leiter should make the staff respectable. Candelaria, a veteran with an impressive 151-95 lifetime record, has battled alcohol abuse for the past two years but says his problems are in the past. Co-captain Ron Guidry, recovering from rotator cuff surgery, Rick Rhoden, Rich Dotson, and a spunky 45 year-old named Tommy John round out the starting rotation. Candelaria will most likely be the fifth starter and Leiter will be used mostly in long relief and spot starts.

The star of the bullpen is ace reliever Dave Righetti. Righetti was 1987 Rolands Relief Man of the Year and is a dominant stopper. With help from Dave Stoddard, Lee Guetterman, Charles (don't call me Charlie) Hudson, and recently re-signed Cecilio Guante, the bullpen is more than adequate.

Taking over for ex-manager Lou Piniella this year is newly-hired Billy Martin. Martin is no stranger to Yankee baseball and along with Mattingly, also feels this is the Yankees year. Fresh off a 2-week honeymoon with wife Jill, Martin recently gave the following advice to reporters at the grand opening of Mickey Mantle's new restaurant in Manhattan, "Bet your house on the Yankees this year."

If Martin and the man who hired him 5 times and fired him 4 times can settle their differences without anyone losing a job, the hot-tempered manager should lead his troops to the top of the standings. Martin is a proven winner and has the great ability to blend veterans with a steady diet of young, talented players. The boss was patient with Piniella, and if he can stay away from Martin, there's no reason why we shouldn't see late October baseball in the Bronx this year. The talent is there, the house that Ruth built awaits!

Olympic Figure Skaters Win Precious Medals

By Robert Abrams

With an "I'm going to Disney World" commercial under his belt, US figure skating Gold medalist Brian Boitano had wished upon a star and his dream came true. Going into the Games, Canadian skater Brian Orser was the favorite because he had defeated Boitano in the 1987 World Championships and also because he finished second in the '84 Olympics. After Boitano's flawless routine on the ice, it was Orser's turn. Orser had the best of both worlds in front of him: he could win the gold and in his home country, too. But, the pressure got to him when he two-footed a triple flip landing and, due to fatigue, did a double axle instead of a planned triple axle. These errors were the difference in medals for both Brians. Orser received the only perfect 6.0 score in the competition but Boitano had higher overall marks on five of the nine judges' cards.

In speed skating, Eric Flaim of the US looked like he had a gold medal secured when he set an Olympic record of 1:52.12 in the 1500 meter race but, it was short-lived. East Germany's Andre Hoffman bettered Flaim's record with his 1:52.06. Flaim's silver medal was more than deserved, it was owed to him after fourth place finishes in the 1000 and 5000 meters.

The US got its second gold medal when Bonnie Blair completed the women's 500m event in a world record time of 39.10 seconds. The difference between her time and the previous record, 39.12, was only a skate's length. With Blair's whole family watching from the stands, she received the medal in an emotional ceremony involving her mouthing the words to the National Anthem as her eyes swelled with joy.

As far as hockey goes, the US was again unable to qualify for the medal round when they lost to West Germany. Going into that game, the US had to win by two goals because first-place Russia had beaten the Czechs, 6-1. But the US couldn't even manage to score two as they were abruptly ousted from the competition, 4-1, and were shown that a team like the US that is without a defense is no team at all. US goalie Mike Richter failed to prevent rebounds, giving the

The Sporting Laugh

West Germans multiple second-shot opportunities while the opposition's goalie, Karl Friesen, was on top of his game, turning back every US chance except a lone one that found the net. In the early minutes of the game, Richter saved a penalty shot that looked like it gave the US a boost but, evidently, looks are deceiving.

Pats Basketball Win 6th Straight

By Glenn Mishuck

The Rolling Stones must have envisioned a game of the likes of the Patriots 79-61 victory over the U.S. Merchant Marine Mariners (8-17) on Tuesday night, when they recorded their song "Winning Ugly." Because that is exactly what Stony Brook (16-9) did. On a night when Stony Brook honored its three seniors, (Scott Walker, James Robinson, and Tom Blumbergs), the Mariners felt no obligation to honor anybody as they slapped, poked, jabbed, and bumped anyone and everyone in what was, said Head Coach Joe Castiglie, "probably the most physical game of the year."

The game began innocently enough as Blumbergs won the opening tap and when Walker hit a 15 foot jumper, the Patriots had the early lead. In fact, Stony Brook raced out to a 18-8 lead with 12:55 remaining in the first half as Walker (18 points) and Blumbergs (19 points and 14 rebounds) scored six points apiece. It looked as though the Patriots were on their way to their third consecutive blowout; but before Stony Brook could start to put them away the Mariners began to claw their way back. Using a pesky man-to-man defense, the Mariners frustrated the tempo of the Patriots' game. Suddenly, Stony Brook became ice cold from the field and when the Mariners scored 13 of the last 17 points of the half, the Patriots lead had been trimmed down to a single point, 32-31.

Highlights of the first half included Stan Martin grabbing an offensive rebound and dribbling coast to coast for a lay-up; and with a minute to go in the half Blumbergs slammed home a perfect ally-oop pass from Martin.

When Mariner center Kevin Ahearn scored on a tip-in to open the second half, the Merchant Marines had their first lead of the game at 33-32. This lead was short lived, however, as Stony Brook went on a 9-0 tear capped off by a Scott Walker three-point jumper; and when Marshall Foskey followed up a missed field goal attempt by the Pats with a lay-up, Stony Brook had regained its ten point lead at 45-35.

When the Patriots opened up a 13-point lead with 12:00 to go in the game, the crowd (500 strong) began to rock, the band began to play and everyone began to feel confident that another tally would soon be added to the Patriots win column. Everyone that is except for the Mariners, who refused to be denied and they again clawed their way back into the affair. After John Doherty hit his third three-point field goal of the evening with 9:15 remaining, the Mariners had reduced the Stony Brook lead to four at 51-47. However, after a Patriot time-out, Stony Brook went on a 10-2 run and opened up a 12-point gap at 61-49. Included in those ten points was a follow by Yves "Mr. Offensive Rebound" Simon of a Blumbergs missed free throw, and a fast break jam by Blumbergs after the ball had been stolen by Walker and passed upcourt to Martin.

After frustrating the Patriots for the first 34:44 of the contest, it looked as though the tables were turning when the Mariners themselves began to show signs of frustration. With 5:16 remaining and the Pats up by 12, Mariner forward Jim Leskinovitch was called for a pushing foul and then was slapped with a technical when he slammed the ball down in utter disgust. Simon sank both ends of the one and one and Walker made good on the technical to finally put the game out of reach. The rest of the game was played at the foul line as Stony Brook connected on 10 of 13 free throws in the final five minutes.

After the game Blumbergs commented, "sometimes we are not psychologically prepared." Along those lines Castiglie stated, "we have a tendency not to play well against physical teams, but tonight we showed that we are capable of winning ugly."

Patriot Notes: The Patriots have won six straight games. They can possibly gain home-court advantage during the ECAC Tournament with a win over SUNY Maritime on Saturday. That will be their final regular season game.

Eric Schwab goes up for the lay-up as Pats take early lead.

Lady Patriots Get A Playoff Berth

By Andy Russell

It was announced earlier this week that the Lady Patriots basketball team (15-9) has been awarded a berth in this weekend's New York State Women's Collegiate Athletic Association Championships in Albany. They will be the 6th seed in the eight team field and are slated to play 3rd seeded Nazareth Friday afternoon at 3 p.m.

The tournament will give the Lady Pats a chance to even several old scores. Nazareth dealt the Patriots a 59-51 setback in January. St. John's Fisher, who would play the Lady Pats in the second round of the tournament if both teams get that far, represents an even worse memory. They not only defeated Stony Brook in the finals of last year's NYSWCAA Championships, but also went on to beat the Lady Pats in the second round of the NCAA Tournament.

What do the Pats have to do to defeat Nazareth in their re-match? "We have to shoot a lot better," said Head Coach Dec McMullen. "Our defense has to really be outstanding."

The possible matchup against St. John's Fisher has another attractive dimension to it: Fisher is ranked first in Division III. "It's every team's and every coach's dream to play the number 1 team," said McMullen.

The playoffs couldn't have come at a better time for the Lady Pats. They have won their last five games and are playing their best ball of the year. Besides the outstanding play of captain Leslie Hathaway (17 points and 13.3 rebounds per game), the Lady Pats are getting strong contributions from many other players. The play of Joan Sullivan and Barbara Boucher, to name two, had been instrumental in Stony Brook's recent surge. "Everybody has started to play the kind of ball their capable of playing," said McMullen.

The Lady Pats realize that they must win the tournament in order to get an NCAA bid. At the same time, they are not willing to concede anything. "This team has more momentum than any team we've had," said McMullen. "I'm very, very optimistic."
