Closed Courses Are Reopened at Last Minute

Statesman/Martv Privalsky

DIRECTOR OF UNIVERSITY RECORDS WILLIAM STROCKBINE thinks the Administration will have to take flack from the faculty who will be teaching over-enrolled courses this fall. He expects the student/faculty ratio to be higher than originally anticipated.

By MICHAEL B. KAPE

Even though a limited number of seats are usually available for each class offered by the University, many classes have been over-enrolled because of a sudden change in policy late last week, which reopened almost every course offered at Stony Brook.

When the number of students who pre-registered for the fall semester fell short of the projected figures that Stony Brook gave to the Central Administration of the State of New York (SUNY), a program was developed over the summer to admit many members of the community as part-time, non-matriculating (PTNM) students for the fall semester. The PTNM students were guaranteed space in the 200 courses that they had to choose from, even though many of these classes had been closed to continuing students during pre-registration.

"Teary-eyed Students"

The computer which registered students during final registration last week was originally programmed to reject schedules requesting any closed courses, regardless of the PTNM status. According to Academic Vice-President Harry Kalish, "There were a lot of teary-eyed students" who were upset over being closed out of courses into which they had been guaranteed admission, as well as many continuing students who unexpectedly showed up at final registration.

Early Friday morning, Kalish and Executive Vice-President T. Alexander Pond decided to re-open every course that the University offered, with the exception of a handful of laboratory science classes. The University offers over 800 courses. The number of courses that remained closed was estimated by Director of University Records William A. Strockbine at 15.

Although Strockbine maintains that almost every course was re-opened, Kalish claims that the courses were re-opened "very selectively, with an eye for the welfare of the students." Kalish went on to say that it was his decision to re-open these "selected" courses. However, Pond said that it was his decision to re-open all the courses in the University, with the exception of a few laboratory science courses. Kalish replied to that by saying, "If [Pond] wants to take credit for it, that's fine with me. He is the Executive Vice-President."

During the last hours of registration, any student who was waiting on line could register for almost any course that the University offered, even though many of these courses, before Friday morning's registration, had been closed to continuing students. At the time of this "open" registration, most of the people registering were PTNM and first-year students, although there were also many continuing students finalizing their schedules.

Pressure from Albany

The program for admitting part-time

students to Stony Brook was developed because the University could not meet the projected enrollment figures which it had submitted to SUNY Central. "Pond is under a lot of pressure to deal with Albany," said Strockbine, "and it would be a serious thing to the University if we fell short of admissions."

"We had to start dumping students into each classroom," Strockbine continued, "with no consideration of the student/faculty ratio." The student/faculty ratio had been projected as 15.1 students to one faculty member for this academic year. Strockbine said that there has been no determination of the ratio's status, at the present time, except that it is higher than projected.

When asked where the extra students would be placed, who would teach them, and how large classes are expected to be this semester, Strockbine replied that academic departments will have two choices: either to offer extra sections of over-enrolled courses, or to increase the work load of the teaching staff. Strockbine went on to say that the Administration will have to take "lumps from the faculty [who will be teaching the over-enrolled courses], not the students."

No Place to Sit

The registrar expected that some of the over-crowding of classes may be relieved by additional classroom space in the new Graduate Physics Laboratory, that was made available to the registrar's office late last week. An additional 15 classrooms will supplement the present 11 rooms being utilized in the new building. However, at this time, no furniture has arrived to equip the rooms. Chairs and portable blackboards are being culled from all over the campus for temporary installation.

When asked about students who pre-registered and were closed out of courses, Assistant Registrar David Bertch answered, "A lot of them are going to be upset." Strockbine added that no decision has been reached yet whether to allow continuing students access to the classes in which they were closed out. He said that a solution will be worked out between himself and the Academic Vice-President. However, he said that Kalish is on vacation this week.

Although Pond said that the faculty has been notified about the over-enrollment, one department chairman, Leonard Auerbach of Theatre Arts, said that he knew nothing about it. He said that there was a meeting with Kalish and some department chairmen on Friday morning regarding the high number of closed courses, but nothing was mentioned about the re-opening of almost all the University's courses. "I don't know how they're going to do this," said Auerbach. "How do you get more people in a course that can handle only 15 people?"

"If they want us to disregard all the upper level courses," Auerbach continued, "and concentrate on the lower level courses, where the extra people are coming in, they may as well close down the University."

Statesman/Ken Katz

EXECUTIVE VICE-PRESIDENT T. ALEXANDER POND reopened over 800 University courses early Friday morning, in an effort to fill classes which were under-enrolled for the fall semester.

Housing Squeeze Forces Tripling of Freshmen

By GARY ALAN DeWAAL

Approximately 900 freshmen began their initial term at Stony Brook this week, tripled in 300 dormitory rooms designed for two-person occupancy in G, H, and Kelly quads.

Although unable to predict when the current situation will be entirely alleviated, officials from the Office of University Housing have said that tripling is a "temporary situation," and say that some students will be de-tripled beginning tonight.

However, Assistant Director of Housing Frank Trowbridge said that there is "always the possibility" that some students might remain tripled for the duration of the school term, although he had "no reason to believe that everyone will not be de-tripled."

This is the second consecutive year that some members of the incoming freshman class were required to be temporarily tripled in campus residences. Last year, 180 students were affected, all of whom were de-tripled by the end of September. Freshmen receive approximately six dollars per week reimbursement for the time they remained tripled at Stony Brook.

Tripling Planned

According to Trowbridge, the University decided last term to temporarily triple freshmen at the beginning of the current fall semester. "We planned on it," he said. "We knew from past history that some percentage of students who had requested housing never show. We therefore decided to plan triples so that when the no-shows materialized we could de-triple."

Trowbridge claimed that Stony Brook lost money because of no-shows in the past. He says that when an individual is assigned a dormitory room and never appears, Stony Brook loses approximately $250 potential income per year if another student cannot be found to fill the vacancy.

Last fall, 230 persons granted campus housing never materialized. "We're hoping that the percentage of no-shows will increase to make space for students tripled," Trowbridge said. "It looks very likely that it will. But if we can't account for 300 no-shows, we can still get space by denying requests for singles and by moving married couples from six person to four person suites." The increased demand for on-campus student housing has already necessitated the termination of a two-year University program allocating dormitory space in Gray College for temporary over-night use by commuting students.

Associate Director of Housing John Ciarelli said he is "pretty optimistic that no one will be tripled for long." He feels that the current housing situation emphasizes the University's need for a married student dormitory complex. Presently, 85 four and six person campus dormitory suites are occupied by married students. Approximately 45 to 50 of these suites possess at least one bedroom not employed by the residing couple for habitation.

Reaction Mixed

Freshmen appear to be unanimously opposed to tripling. According to Peter Mikochik of Gray College, "There may be some advantages to tripling, for example, it's better knowing two guys than one. But, there's just no room in the rooms for three people and their possessions."

Karen Rosenblum of Benedict College cited "not enough room" as the reason why she is "very upset" at being tripled. "I don't mind the extra person," she says, "but, there's just no room for three people."

According to Dave Bavmann, also of Benedict College, "I don't like tripling... It's uncomfortable and it's something we had no prior knowledge of."

Both Mikochik and Rosenblum also claim they received no prior indication from the University that they might be tripled. "I didn't have any advance notice that I'd be tripled until I walked in today," claimed Mikochik when interviewed by Statesman on August 28.

However, Ciarelli insisted that all incoming freshmen received prior information from the University

Statesman/Lou Manna

ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF HOUSING FRANK TROWBRIDGE conceded that tripling of freshmen was planned to prevent the University from losing money because of no-showing students.

informing them that there was a possibility that they might be tripled in the fall. He claims that "tripling was discussed at all orientations." A University pamphlet entitled I Wish I Had Known, distributed to all freshmen as they checked into Stony Brook this week, claimed that, "There will be approximately 150 to 200 tripled rooms in G and H quads... Your housing bill, if you are tripled, will be adjusted accordingly."

Construction Alters Campus, Limits Parking

By MICHAEL B. KAPE

Many new features and many new construction projects are dotting the 1,100 acres of Stony Brook's campus, and returning students may have a hard time finding familiar landmarks.

The old main entrance is no longer in existence, and the entrance by the Biological Sciences Building has been permanently closed off. Replacing the two entrances is a four-lane access route that ties in with Loop Road. Although the road is open to traffic, construction is not expected to be finished on the entire main entrance project for a few more weeks.

Other construction projects currently underway on campus are:

- an underpass linking the main campus with the Health Sciences Center (HSC). The underpass will eventually be under Nicolls Road, and will lead from the Biological Sciences Building mall to the inside of one of the basement floors of the HSC, and is intended for pedestrians and service vehicles. The project is expected to be finished by Thanksgiving.

- at the present time, parking on the core campus is severely limited because of the construction of the new main entrance. However, upon completion of the roadwork, a new visitor's parking lot will be constructed, and the Administration parking lot will be reconstructed.

- the parking lot behind the Stony Brook Union is nearly completed, along with a traffic circle for easier access. However, as soon as the Union lot is re-opened, the Infirmary parking lot will be closed for reconstruction.

- the H-parking lot behind the Earth and Space Sciences Building is nearly completed, and should open soon. This lot was reconstructed to accommodate more spaces.

- the temporary parking lot across from Stage XII and Kelly is currently being used as a detour, but will re-open as a parking lot.

- the construction along Loop Road by Kelly is for the new high temperature hot water system being installed. This project is expected to continue through the month of September. When it is completed, construction of a similar nature will begin in front of Stage XII.

- a new bus turnaround has been constructed behind the engineering buildings, for access to the core campus. In addition, the road leading into the turnaround, which passes by Roth quad, has been widened to accommodate an increase in traffic.

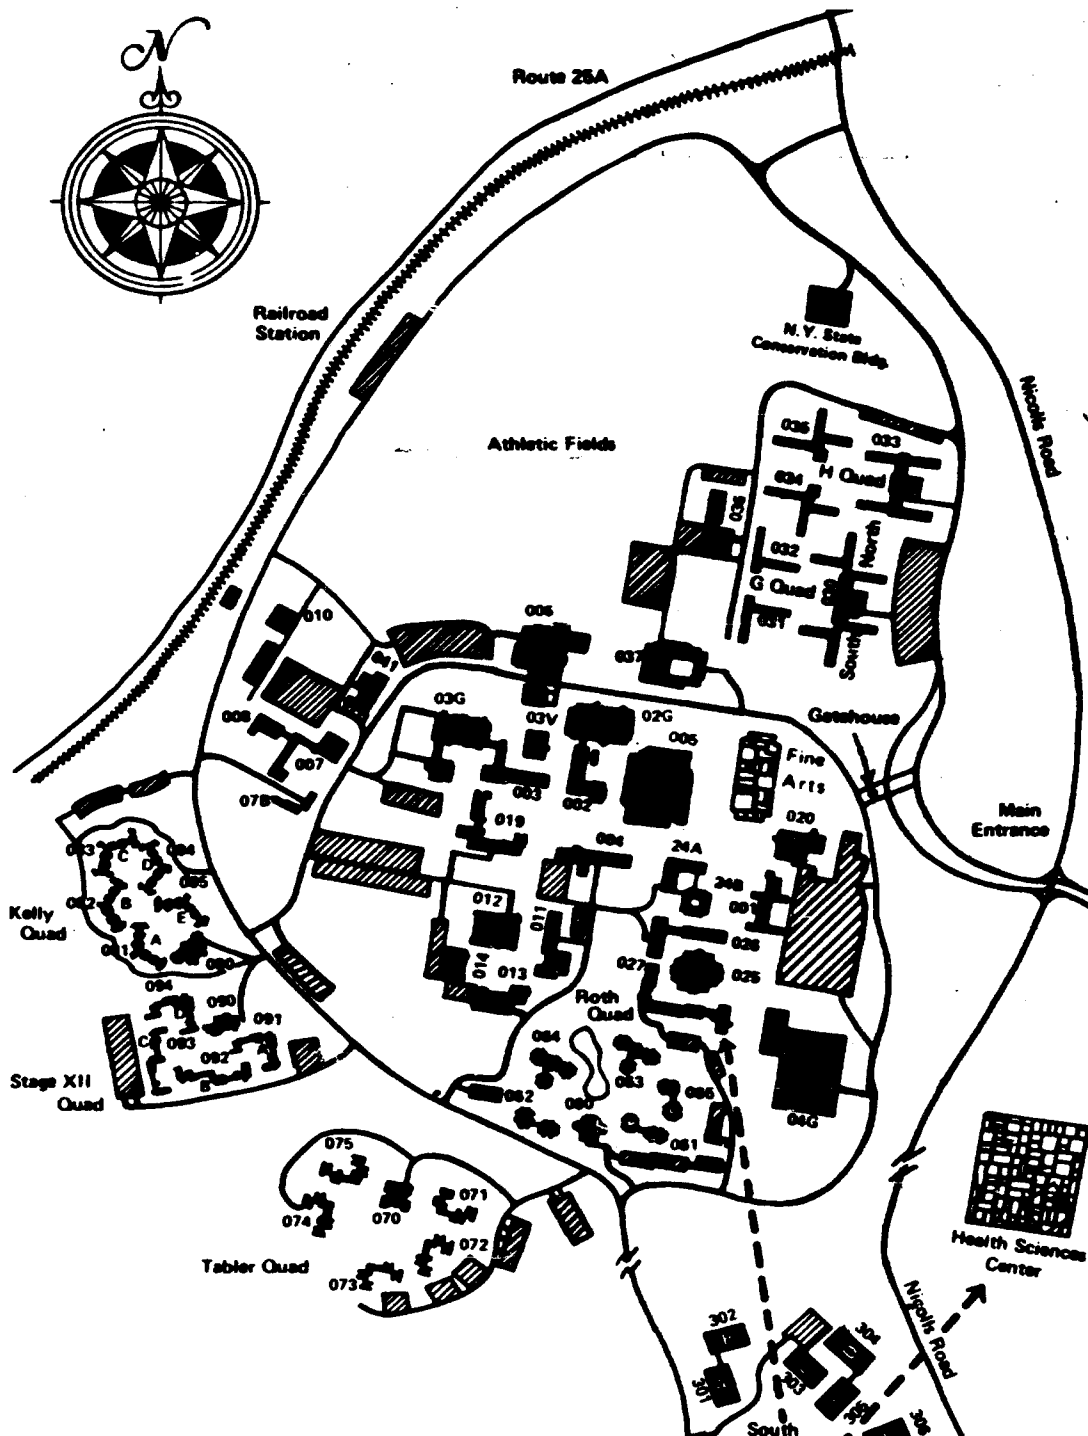

- an enlarged Tabler/Roth parking lot is currently under construction, and is expected to open within three weeks.

- construction on the HSC Tower is continuing throughout the year, with completion of the building expected by September, 1975. In addition, construction will soon begin on the new University Hospital, which will be as tall as the HSC building.

- construction will begin later this month on the new Social and Behavioral Sciences Building. This will mean a reduction in the number of parking spaces in the Administration lot.

- construction is expected to begin soon on Phase II of the new Fine Arts Building. Phase I

Stony Brook's Long Hot Summer . . .

Statesman/Robert Schwartz

STAGE XII RESIDENTS met, early this summer, with Director of Facilities Planning Charles Wagner to discuss a disputed relocation to G and H quads, necessitated by the installation of a high temperature heating system. The students were finally allowed to remain in Stage XII throughout the summer.

While most students were away from the Stony Brook campus for summer 1974, Statesman published a weekly edition. These are some of the top stories that Statesman reported during the summer.

Graduation. On May 19, 1974, 3,900 Stony Brook students became former Stony Brook students through commencement. The ceremony was highlighted by two distinctive firsts: the first class of physicians to obtain degrees from the University medical school and the first undergraduate, Janet Bernard, (a double major in French and Russian), to obtain a perfect 4.0 grade point average.

Summer School. One day after graduation, another large group of students participated in a different sort of ritual — registration. Lines for registration wound around the lobby, extended up and down staircases, and continued along the first floor of the Administration Building. Approximately 2,200 students registered for one or both of the two summer sessions on May 20, in the first year that two sessions have been held. Vice-President for Student Affairs Elizabeth Wadsworth, who joined with other high level administrators in helping with the registration process, observed "how tiresome it can be for students to stand and wait on line." One student reported that she had waited 3 1/2 hours on line.

Statesman/Larry Rubin

RESIDENTS OF BROOKHAVEN TOWN met at public hearing to discuss a proposed anti-grouper ordinance. The measure, which banned more than four unrelated persons from living together, was approved.

Although only 775 students registered for the second session on July 8, the lines were just as long as those at the first registration. Director of University Records William A. Strockbine said that the long lines were the result of problems with the University's new registration procedures, which utilize remote optical scanners that link up with the Computer Center.

Stage XII. A group of approximately 200 students residing in Stage XII successfully defied a University Housing Office ultimatum to relocate in G and H quads for the summer, because of construction. University officials told students that the contract with John W. Grace, and Co., the contractor installing the high temperature hot water heating system, stipulated that the dorms be vacant during construction. After three weeks of protest by the students, the Housing Office decided to allow the students to remain in Stage XII for the summer. Associate Director of Housing John Ciarelli said that Grace and Company informed the University that materials necessary to complete the project had not arrived, therefore, construction would not affect the buildings inhabited by the students.

Birth. University President John S. Toll and his wife Debbie, announced the birth of their second daughter, a spanking eight-pounder, who was born at 8:01 a.m. on July 11 at Saint Charles Hospital in Port Jefferson. Although the Tolls did not immediately name their new-born daughter, it is reported that they have since named her Caroline.

Grouper Ban. The Brookhaven Town Board adopted an anti-grouper ordinance which prohibits more than four people unrelated by blood or marriage from living together in a single family dwelling. Town officials said that the law would be enforced on a complaint basis, and stated that they would not actively search for violators. A public hearing on the ordinance held prior to its adoption drew approximately 150 residents, including Toll, who stated the University's opposition to the ordinance.

Rape Trial. The man who was accused of raping an O'Neill College resident on October 27, 1973, was found innocent. The trial, which started on June 19, began with the rape victim, now graduated, taking the stand and testifying about the rape incident and how she had identified the suspect. The 12-man jury reached its verdict on June 28, clearing the suspect of charges of first-degree rape and third-degree assault, after two days of deliberation.

Oaks Appointment. Dr. J. Howard Oaks, formerly dean of the School of Dental Medicine, was appointed the Vice-President for Health Sciences by the Board of Trustees of the State University of New York and Chancellor Ernest L. Boyer. Oaks, who replaces Edmund Pellegrino, turned down an offer from another university to accept the new Stony Brook position.

Subcontracts. The Horn & Hardart Corporation took over operation of the campus food service, and Follett became the bookstore subcontractor. Horn & Hardart began the installation of new equipment on August 1, and assumed control of the food service on August 19.

Orientation. Eleven orientation sessions were held for a record number of entering freshmen, 1,400. Twenty student leaders ran the orientation sessions, under the supervision of Director of Residential Advising Richard Solo.

PHAUWL IHNN (fall in) n, a traditional gathering of all factions of the Stony Brook Community for a day of unilateral enjoyment.

Hurry, hurry, hurry! The show is about to begin. Take your places, please.

Ladies and gentlemen, welcome to the greatest show on Long Island, and possibly the free world, featuring dances, exhibitions and feasts enough to thrill the hearts of every man, woman, and child!

In the center ring, a sensational new act, featuring a troupe of thousands. Direct from the plans of campus experts, the new Stony Brook tradition, the Phauwl Ihnn!

Yes, ladies and gentlemen, the Phauwl Ihnn, a result of planning by the most distinguished and competent University elements (faculty, Administration, and students), including Statesman, Polity, WUSB, Civil Service Employees Association, Faculty Student Association, Union Governing Board, Faculty Senate, University Relations, Office for Student Affairs, Office of the President, Department of Public Safety, and Maintenance.

Phauwl Ihnn is an attempt to bring together the entire campus community for one glorious celebration. Never before in Stony Brook history has a single event been so heralded. A special proclamation has been issued by University President John S. Toll, announcing the activities and cancelling classes after 3 p.m. on Friday, September 6. Copies of the proclamation are available on campus, through the Union Main Desk and University Relations, Administration Building.

So, ladies and gentlemen, sit tight in your seats and here we go!

Phauwl Ihnn Schedule

Beginning at 3 p.m. on Friday on the athletic fields behind the Gym, Phauwl Ihnn commences with welcoming speeches by Vice President for Student Affairs Elizabeth Wadsworth, Polity President Ed Spauster, and Toll.

At 4 p.m., there will be faculty representatives from each academic department on hand to answer student and staff questions on a completely informal and person-to-person basis. This will offer students an unprecedented opportunity to actually meet their instructors.

At 5:30 p.m., dinner will be served on the green, courtesy of the new University food service, Horn and Hardart. Fifty cents buys you a burger or chicken, accompanied by corn on the cob, potato salad, and biscuits. Beer and soda will be available throughout the evening at 25 cents a cup. While you eat, ladies and gentlemen, listen to the sounds of Your Father's Moustache, direct from New York City and the Stony Brook radio station, WUSB.

Two Bands

Then, from 8 p.m. until midnight, you can dance to the sounds of two (count them, two) bands. One will be a student rock band called the Womblers, and the other will include faculty and administration members and will play music written for the non-rocking set.

Finally, at midnight, COCA

(Committee on Cinematographic Arts) will present Electraglide in Blue in Lecture Center 100.

With a program like this, there's bound to be something for everyone, so, come one, come all! It's Stony Brook people who will make the Phauwl Ihnn a tradition.

During the coming season, various other activities will occupy the center ring of the Stony Brook stage. For theatre, there is the Fanny Brice Theatre in Stage XII Cafeteria, Theatre Arts' Calderone Theatre in South Campus Building B, The Music Box in Gerahwin College in Roth Quad, and the Union Auditorium.

For film entertainment, there are weekly movies by COCA on Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights, and Tuesday Films in the Union Auditorium.

There are art exhibitions regularly in the Union Gallery and in the Humanities Gallery.

Concerts are presented on the rock side by SAB (Student Activities Board) and in the classical vein by University Orchestra and the Music department.

All in all, it's going to be a fun year, so don't go home every weekend. Stick around a while and have a good time.

New Construction Changes of the building is nearing completion, and it is now projected to open sometime in November.

by the end of this semester, Bisector Road, which runs in front of the Union, the Library, the Chemistry Building, the Physics Building, and the Gym, will be closed off to all except handicapped and service vehicles.

Patriot Batmen Begin Split-Season This Week

By KATHY O'ROURKE

Stony Brook's baseball field has been lying unused for three months, but beginning this week, it will come alive again as the Patriot batmen get their fall season underway.

Baseball is unique among Stony Brook sports in having a "split-season." Although the Long Island spring is very short and almost too cold and wet for a complete schedule, it is considered the official season by the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA). Therefore, the fall has become an integral part in the development of the team, although the games played at this time are not counted by the NCAA. Along with most coaches from other schools in the northeastern area with similar spring weather problems, Patriot baseball coach Rick Smoliak said he would like to see the fall schedule become a valid part of the baseball season. But for now, he and his team must be resigned to using the fall as an early prep for the spring.

Coming off the best spring season (a 7-2 conference record) yet compiled by a Stony Brook baseball team, Smoliak is faced with making adjustments due to the loss of three players: leftfielder Hector Paberele who will return to school this fall as a member of the soccer team, Mike Carmen, last year's catcher and team captain who graduated in May, and relief pitcher Kevin Fox, who also graduated.

Compensating for the loss of Fox will be the return of Art Lencek, who sat out the entire spring with arm trouble. According to Smoliak, Carmen's job will be difficult to fill. "He (Carmen) did an outstanding job receiving," said Smoliak. "I hate to lose a kid like him, and we may have trouble filling his shoes for quite a while." With Carmen gone, Steve Aviano and a transfer student, Bob Crux, ineligible to play last year, are the likely candidates to split the catching duties. Most of the team have played in summer leagues and will be physically conditioned to get back into action this Saturday, against New Haven, in a game to be played in Connecticut.

Smoliak's main concern is the returning pitching staff. "It takes them a little bit longer to get back in shape and we have to rush them a bit. All the pitchers will be required to go at least six innings."

Freshmen are welcome to try out for the team. "I encourage them all to come out, but they're going to have to prove themselves," says Smoliak. "If they've played high school ball or had other team experience, I tell them they'll stand a better chance."

These new batmen will have only four weeks to try to make the squad, as the fall season has been shortened by two weeks. Smoliak favored the change. "It's more condensed and it keeps the enthusiasm up," he said. "We cut short because the players were getting tired."

These next four weeks of Knickerbocker tournament games, (different from Knick Conference games), are in preparation for a week-long trip to Georgia in late March of next year. Competition will be keen for a spot on the bus, and both new and returning players are anticipating this major road trip. This is the first time the Patriot baseball team will be travelling so far away, and the team welcomes this new competition.

Tentatively, the number of games has been set at seven, with such noted schools in collegiate baseball as Georgia Southern, Mercer, and Lehigh on the schedule.

Smoliak will also be gearing his team toward the Knickerbocker Championships, to be held September 20 and 21 in Baldwin. Last year, Stony Brook finished runner-up to Adelphi University, whose 8-1 conference record made the Pats only second best again last spring.

THE STONY BROOK BASEBALL TEAM will return to the diamond this Saturday to begin the fall half of its 1974-75 season. Coach Rick Smoliak hopes to use the first half of the split season to get his team into gear for the spring.
