Toll to Head the University of Maryland?

By JACK MILLROD

University President John Toll is considered "a particularly strong candidate" for the position of University President at the University of Maryland, according to a story that appeared in yesterday's edition of the Baltimore Evening Sun. Toll spent nearly 13 years at that institution as a professor and department chairman before assuming his present position.

The story named Toll as one of five candidates a 26-man search committee will present to the State board of Regents in Maryland on Monday for consideration. The position will become vacant when the current University of Maryland President, Wilson Elkins retires July 1.

"I have not sought and am not seeking any other position for I feel that I have much still to do as President at Stony Brook," Toll said last night. However, he would not say whether or not he would accept the position if it is offered.

Pennsylvania State University Senior Vice President Stanley Ikenberry, University of Arizona Vice President for Health Sciences Merlin DuVal, University of Minnesota President Peter McGrath, and University of Utah President David Gardner were the four other candidates named by the report which speculated only on Toll's chances.

R. Lee Hornbake, who is Executive Director of the search committee looking for Elkin's replacement, would not confirm the report that Toll was one of the five candidates recommended by the committee. "The committee was interested in Dr. Toll," Hornbake said, but he declined to discuss the matter further.

Search Narrowed

The University of Maryland announced last Monday that after a five month investigation, the search committee had narrowed its possible choices to five persons, however until last night's newspaper report none of the candidates had been identified. The University of Maryland has yet to release the names officially.

Toll visited the University of Maryland three weeks ago during his trip to Washington D.C., however last night he would not confirm that he had been interviewed by the search committee at that time. "I do visit the University of Maryland regularly," he said, adding that "no special significance" should be attached to his last visit.

Toll spent yesterday in New York City discussing Stony Brook's financial needs for the upcoming year with State University of New York Chancellor Clifton Wharton. When asked if the possibility of his candidacy was discussed, Toll said, "No."

In September of 1965 Toll began the first of his three five year terms as University President at Stony Brook. His present term expires in 1980. He began teaching physics at the University of Maryland in 1952.

Toll has been offered several positions during his stay at Stony Brook but each time he immediately said no, Debbie Toll, his wife, said last night, "I don't know if he's serious about it."

H-Quad Residents Lose Heat, Hot Water

By TOM CHAPPELL

Heat and hot water service will be suspended in H-Quad starting at noon today, so that maintenance crews can make repairs on the quad's heating system. According to Facilities Planning Director Kevin Jones, the outage could last more than 24 hours.

Jones said that the outage is being caused by a bad leak in heating system pipes beneath the H-Quad courtyard. "We've been losing 15,000 to 20,000 gallons of water a day," Jones said. Steam has been getting into the basements of buildings in the area and affecting mechanical equipment.

The decision to suspend hot water service was announced late yesterday afternoon.

Polity Hotline Coordinator Roger Rivera expressed dismay over the lack of warning given H-Quad residents. He said that in the past students were notified "a week or so" ahead of time. "Rather Short Notice"

While Jones acknowledged that "it was rather short notice," he said that if the heating system in H-Quad was not fixed immediately it could affect the entire campus heating system.

According to Jones, facilities operations officials watched the leak grow progressively worse for several days before deciding to suspend heat and hot water service yesterday. "We kept an eye on it to see how extensive the water loss was," Jones said. "It kept going up so we decided to make the repairs."

Rivera, however, said that if facilities operations officials knew for several days that they might have to schedule a hot water outage, they should have alerted students of that possibility. "Students have a right to know," he said.

After the decision to make the repairs was made, students were notified through their Residence Hall Directors (RHDs). Rivera said that Polity Hotline had not been informed of the outage until 4 PM yesterday. Many H-Quad residents were not informed until later last night.

The news of the outage was not well received by residents of Benedict D2 who have been experiencing a flu epidemic.

"I think it's terrible," D2 resident Scott Allen said, "When you're feeling sick a hot shower makes you feel better. Turning off the heat is ridiculous. We've got seven guys on the hall who have the flu."

"It's difficult to say how long it will take," Jones said. "After we shut the system off we have to wait for it to cool down before we can send someone in to locate and determine the extent of the damage," he said, adding that "temperatures in the system can reach as high as 360 degrees Fahrenheit."

This is the third major outage since the fall semester began, although Jones called this a "rather uneventful season as far as outages go."

The first outage this year occurred in Kelly, Roth, Tabler, and Stage XII Quads in November. The second outage occurred over the Christmas vacation at Gershwin, Hendrix, and Whitman Colleges in Roth Quad.

Haldeman: Nixon In On Watergate From Start

New York (AP) — Richard Nixon's number one White House aide says the former president was the driving force behind the Watergate break-in and then threatened to embarrass the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) if it refused to participate in the cover-up.

In a new book, "The Ends of Power," H.R. Haldeman suggests Nixon and former aide Charles Colson pushed for the break-in at Democratic Party headquarters to obtain inside information about chairman Lawrence O'Brien, whom they suspected was on the payroll of industrialist Howard Hughes.

He writes that Nixon "sometimes seemed to lose touch with reality" on matters pertaining to Hughes.

Haldeman hints that Nixon may have been blackmailed later by Colson. He also suggests that Nixon may have directly ordered the 1971 burglary of the office of the psychiatrist who had been treating Pentagon Papers leaker Daniel Ellsberg, something the former president has always denied.

The book, finished in prison, is a devastating portrayal of the nation's 37th president by the man who was never far from his side in his first term.

However, nowhere in the book does Haldeman offer proof of his allegations.

The former president's reaction to the sensational charges was contained in a one-sentence statement issued by his office in San Clemente, California:

"Former President Nixon's memoirs will be published in May."

Nixon aides refused to return telephone calls.

Early Publication

The book was not due in stores until February 27, but excerpts were sold to newspapers for publication next week. Newsweek magazine paid about $125,000 for 30,000 words to be printed in its next two issues.

Despite extreme efforts by the publisher, Times Books, to prevent leaks, the Washington Post carried an extensive account in yesterday's edition. It was based, the Post said, on two-thirds of the book.

"I believe the initiative for the Watergate break-in came from Nixon."

— H.R. Haldeman

Later in the day, Newsweek released its transcript and finally the publisher furnished the Associated Press with a copy. Times Books said then it would be rushing the book into stores today.

"I believe the initiative for the Watergate break-in came from Nixon through Colson, who in turn touched off the fuse."

He says Nixon "was in on the cover-up from Day One, although neither he nor we considered it a cover-up at the time."

Haldeman says Nixon talked of paying hush money to the Watergate burglars and using the CIA to sidetrack the ongoing FBI investigation three days after the June 17, 1972, burglary. That, in turn, was three days before the "smoking gun" conversation which, when released by the White House, preceded Nixon's resignation.

Open Up Bay of Pigs

"When you get the CIA people in, say 'look, the problem is that this will open up the whole Bay of Pigs thing again,'" Haldeman quotes Nixon as saying. "So they should call the FBI in and say for the good of the country don't go any further into the case. Period."

Haldeman said he passed the message on to CIA Director Richard Helms and said he was shocked at his violent reaction.

"The Bay of Pigs has nothing to do with this," Haldeman says Helms and Deputy Director Vernon Walters then expressed no concern about telling the FBI to stop its Watergate investigation.

Kennedy Assassination

"Again, I wondered, during that meeting, what was such dynamite in the Bay of Pigs story," Haldeman writes, adding:

"It seems that in all of those Nixon references to the Bay of Pigs he was actually referring to the Kennedy assassination.

"When Nixon said 'it's likely to blow the whole Bay of Pigs' he might have been reminding Helms, not so gently, of the cover-up of the CIA assassination attempts on the hero of the Bay of Pigs, Fidel Castro — a CIA operation that may have triggered the Kennedy tragedy and which Helms desperately wanted to hide."

Washington (AP)—The Carter administration yesterday launched a defense of its proposed sale of jet fighters to Saudi Arabia while visiting Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan held talks here with Secretary of State Cyrus Vance.

In a 10-page memorandum, the State Department said sale of 60 F-15 Eagles to the oil-rich kingdom would be consistent with peace objectives and that the decision was taken with "scrupulous care" for Israel's security.

Dayan was certain to register his country's protest of the deal in fast-paced talks with President Jimmy Carter, Vance and House members. Israel contends that delivery of the jets, which can zoom into Israeli air space from Saudi territory in less than a minute, poses a threat to its security.

Ramallah, Occupied West Bank (AP) — The assassination of one of this town's most powerful Arab figures has aroused fears among Israeli occupation forces that Arab guerrillas have decided to strike at Israel through suspected collaborators.

Wealthy merchant Abdel-Nur Khalil Janhu, 55, gunned down outside his shop, was the third Arab connected with the occupying forces killed in Ramallah in the past two months.

He was known to work closely with the military government, a serious crime under the unwritten code of the Palestinian Liberation Organization.

Washington (AP)—Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) Secretary Joseph Califano announced yesterday that his department will rely primarily on federal employees rather than private bill collectors to track down more than $400 million in defaulted student loans guaranteed by the government.

The secretary said private collection agencies will be used "on an experimental basis in two regions." He said concern for the privacy and civil rights of student borrowers has slowed the department's announced plan to turn the former students' bad debts over to private collectors.

Califano also announced a program to tighten controls over federal aid programs for students and said that HEW will seek legislation enabling the Internal Revenue Service to help track down defaulters.

Washington (AP)—Postmaster General Benjamin Bailar resigned yesterday, ending three years as head of the financially troubled Postal Service.

Bailar's resignation comes at a time when the Postal Service is considering elimination of Saturday mail delivery as an economy move, although efforts are underway in Congress to thwart any such plan.

In addition to the controversy about Saturday mail delivery, Bailar had drawn criticism from some members of Congress because of his efforts to close thousands of small rural post offices as an economy measure.

State & Local

Albany (AP)—The New York State Legislature got its first official accounting yesterday of the $200 million in budget-gap aid Governor Hugh Carey has promised New York City, and learned that very little of it involves any increases in the $12 billion budget Carey has already presented.

New York Mayor Edward Koch and other top city and state officials were called before the Legislature's fiscal committees for a special hearing, nearly two weeks after Carey and Koch announced they had agreed on the $200 million package.

Albany (AP) — The state's highest court ruled yesterday that elected officials cannot use accumulated sick leave to increase their retirement benefits, because they get paid whether they show up for work or not.

In a case involving four retired Otsego County officials, the Court of Appeals found that because elected officials "generally were free to take as much or as little time off as they wish" without affecting their salaries, they could not claim sick leave benefits given other workers.

Pike Is Weary of Wasting Time on Drivel

By RICH BERGOVOY

Congressman Otis Pike (D-Riverhead), who this week announced his retirement from the House after nine terms, once defeated the Pentagon with a single speech. The silver haired, dignified Pike stood before the House, flapping his arms like a bird to protest a bill awarding flight pay to desk bound generals and admirals.

Another time, Pike discovered that metal rods selling for 50 cents were listed for $22.50 in a Pentagon catalogue under the designation "precision shafting." "For once," Pike deadpanned, "the American taxpayer got precisely what he paid for."

In his 18 years of service in Congress, the 56-year-old Pike outwitted and exposed bureaucratic brassbottoms in the name of taxpayers everywhere.

Pike always had a very strong sense of duty. But during his weekly radio speech to his constituents last Sunday, he announced that he had grown tired of it all. He announced that he had made a final decision not to seek a 10th consecutive term. Representing the First Congressional District, which takes in the eastern two-thirds of Suffolk County, although he conceded that he could probably get re-elected.

Pike said his decision to retire was based on his disillusionment with politics.

Of the electorate, he said: "...people bug me more than they used to. No one 'asks' or 'requests' anymore, they demand."

Of his party he said, "I feel increasingly uncomfortable with the never ending fiscal irresponsibility of my own party." Congress too felt his stinging wit: "...so much of the work is nit-picking trivia! This Congressman is weary of wasting his time on drivel."

Not even campaigning escaped Pike's droll tongue: "It was fun being the underdog...the last few campaigns have been embarrassingly easy."

However, the true reason for retirement was probably an Ethics Bill passed by the House last summer that limited outside sources of income for representatives. The bill would have prevented him from earning more than $8,600 per year from his Riverhead law practice.

Indeed, Pike's sense of duty was so great that he recommended that the House cite then Secretary of State Henry Kissinger for contempt of Congress for his refusal to hand over secret documents related to CIA misdoings. Only the intervention of President Gerald Ford prevented the contempt citation.

Pike entered the national limelight as a result of his chairing the House Select Committee on Intelligence Activities.

"The House Armed Services Committee does not control the Pentagon," Pike once asserted, "the Pentagon controls the House Armed Services Committee. The Committee should say 'No' once in a while." When a large defense expenditure was up for a vote which would create many jobs in his district, Pike voted against it as waste.

In late 1974, Pike moved from the Armed Services Committee to the more powerful Ways and Means Committee, and then became Chairman of the Select Committee on Intelligence Activities in the summer of 1975. Pike has voted for bills to aid civil rights, poverty, urban renewal, environmental preservation, and the creation of the Fire Island National Seashore. But, in the late 1960's Pike supported legislation to cut off aid to protesting students.

The contrast was because Pike has always been more practical than ideological. One Suffolk County official said, "Pike runs for office as a Democrat, is elected by Republicans, has liberal leanings and a conservative approach."

In part, this was because Pike had to get elected from one of the most heavily Republican districts in the East. But his dedication to the Democrats was genuine. He became a Democrat at age 14 during the Depression, when his sister, a social worker, told him about a family with a 150 acre farm that was forced to eat potatoes for Sunday dinner.

Though Pike has announced no definite plans for his retirement, he has said in the past that he would like to be a political columnist.

University Commits Itself To Industrial Cooperation

By NATHANIEL RABINOVICH

A new Center for Industrial Cooperation has opened in the College of Engineering and Applied Sciences, according to University President John Toll.

The Center, which is thought to be one of the first of its kind in the country, was developed to "provide a catalyst for economic growth and development on Long Island," according to Dean of the College of Engineering and Applied Sciences John Bilello.

"The major goal is to transfer the University's technical expertise into practical usefulness and increased productivity for Long Island's industries," Toll said.

"The Center is a starting ground for mutual benefit," Bilello said. "The intellectual excitement that makes ideas boom into projects can be utilized by companies in the Long Island region. On the other hand, interaction with industry increases our professional development."

Will Provide Many Services

Bilello added that the Center will provide consulting services in technical matters, business, labor relations, and management areas in a variety of fields where industry needs help with problem solving.

The Center's executive director, Arthur Gilmore, an engineer for Grumman Corporation, has been responsible for much of its planning, with assistance from Bilello and Toll.

Gilmore said that presently he and Bilello comprise Center's entire staff but he added that "the faculty is the heart of the whole operation."

Gilmore said that the Center will eventually be staffed by faculty from the Engineering Department, and he expressed hope that faculty members from other departments such as physics will also join the Center.

Private industries that use the Center will be charged a fee ranging from $500 to $1,500 per year, Gilmore said. He said that the amount charged will vary according to the size of the business, but added that free diagnostic consultations will also be provided.

In addition, the executive director said the Center hopes to receive funding from federal, state, and local governments.

Opportunities for part-time employment and job placements for students may also develop as the Center grows, Bilello said.

"Our premise is that Long Island industry should have a full, easy access to whatever assistance the University can offer," Bilello said. "There are some very gifted experts at the University who can assist industry in developing a technology that will increase productivity and growth, and help in improving the quality of life."

COLORFUL CONGRESSMAN OTIS PIKE has announced that he will not seek another term in office.

Committee Wants Hotline for RHD Gripes

By CHRIS FAIRHALL and MITCHELL MUROY

Students may soon be able to phone in complaints about their residence hall director (RHD) to the Polity Hotline if a proposal by the Residence Life Advisory Committee is approved by Hotline personnel.

The proposal was made by Residence Life Advisory Committee Chairman David Grossman, who said the committee was originally established by Polity last September to evaluate the new (RHD) program.

Grossman said he hopes to thoroughly investigate the (RHD) program. The Hotline number is necessary for this, Grossman said, because "I want to make sure there is some place for a student to complain to," so that the committee will know what faults the RHD program has.

In a memorandum to Polity senators, Grossman states: "The [RHD] program has its problems and faults which the committee will try to remedy. To do this, the committee must take a series of strong, aggressive steps to prove to the administration that the program is a waste and the students don't want or need it in their dorms."

Hotline Co-ordinator Roger Rivera said he would also like to stop the RHD program but he added that in the "next two or three weeks I can't see doing it."

Grossman "is going to have a lot of persuading to do" to get Hotline to go along with the idea, Rivera said. He also stressed that any investigation must be done well.

Hotline would have difficulty doing this now, Rivera stated, because it lacks sufficient staff. Rivera also said that an investigation would be double work because two copies of every report involving Residence Life would have to be filed.

Whitman RHD Phyllis Solomon said that she didn't agree with the proposal. "I will support something that is an evaluation by Residence Life, student staff and students about the RHD program as a whole and each RHD individually," she said.

Kelly D RHD Gary Hodges said the Hotline would only "bring out the negative aspects of the RHD program," because it is a complaint line. He added, "It is not asking for the positive aspects of the program. I think there should be a campus poll. If there was a formal campus poll I think that most students would be in favor of the program. The RHD program has positive effects and I feel that the building as a community has improved due to it."

Russ Pince, a resident of Dreiser College said, "The RHDs are 100 percent better. It's the first time I ever talked to someone in that position. In Langmuir, I didn't even know who the program coordinator was."

Lee Brickman, another Dreiser resident said, "The RHDs do a lot more than the program coordinator did. They meet the students and are interested in the students problems. I do feel that they are taking some power from the students. I ran for residential assistant (RA) and while Gina Spitzer, (Dreiser RHD) didn't have a vote, she could veto an RA something the program coordinator couldn't do."

The RHD program was originally drafted by Residence Life in March 1977, in an attempt to eliminate the position of program coordinator to install full-time dorm director, and to change the method in which resident staff were hired.

Possible Alternatives

Polity attempted to come up with an alternate proposal, one that would leave the hiring of dorm directors in the hands of students, but it was rejected by Residence Life.

Problems arose when several RAs and managerial assistants (MAs) in O'Neill College threatened to quit because office hours for student staff were instituted. A similar situation in Kelly D led to the resignation of two RAs (Kelly D) and RHD John Ortiz stated that he intended to hire the replacements on his own, without the approval of students. This caused many RAs and MAs to feel that their power was being usurped by the RHDs.

Pike Will Be Missed

In the days before politicians were falling all over each other to prove their virtue, Congressman Otis Pike immediately accepted the request of a journalist to follow him through several work days. "The more people know about politicians, the better off we'll all be," said Pike.

Representing a mainly conservative district with a heavy Republican enrollment, he still compiled a record based on wit and candor. For years he has distributed a "Blast Pike" kit to local newspapers so that they would be able to know his weak points at a glance. Pike was also the congressman who needled the Pentagon into reform of wasteful buying procedures when they were paying $22.50 for a metal rod which sold in a mail order catalogue for 50 cents. "Precision shafting," he called both the part and the action.

When Pike was given the job of straightening out the House Select Committee on Intelligence Activities, he stood up to the arrogance of Henry Kissinger and the deceit of the CIA. They tried to discredit him over mishandling of secret documents, but Pike showed that the mistake was due to shoddy record keeping on the part of the CIA. Partly in recognition for his work with the Committee, Pike was given the Thomas Jefferson Award for his efforts to promote press freedom and curb government secrecy.

Now virtue, or the appearance of it, is quite popular among politicians. So perhaps it is not so surprising that Congressman Pike has cited the new Congressional Ethics Bill as one of the main reasons for his decision to retreat from public life after nine terms in the House. Pike protested, "If I take those 101 days when Congress was not in session and go junketing all around the world at your expense, I am ethical. If I go home and work in my law office, I am ethical."

When Italian journalist Oriana Fallaci interviewed Pike, she was tempted to compare him to Jimmy Stewart in the movie "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," but Pike is no idealist. He has too much of a sense of a humor for that — his retirement announcement made that clear.

"Will I miss it?" Pike asked. "Lord, yes, I'll miss it! Congressmen are treated, in Washington at least, like little tin Jesuses."

In his 18 years of Congressional service, Otis Pike represented eastern Long Island with distinction. He will be missed.

An Era Ends

It began in 1964, February 25, with Sonny Liston TKO'd in the seventh round. It ended February 15, 1978 with Muhammed Ali losing a split decision to the relentless Leon Spinks.

In between something happened that can not be adequately explained in any movie, book, or editorial. Muhammed Ali's career transcended any particular area of human endeavor. It was 18 years that had to be lived, experienced and felt; it was a career that will not soon be forgotten.

The Champ is gone. "The Greatest" has been defeated, but he leaves behind him a legacy that is certainly the greatest in boxing history — perhaps the greatest in all of sport. In 1964, he rose to power and fame, rescuing a dying sport, exciting a nation recovering from apathy, and badly in need of emotional leaders.

To become sentimental and nostalgic about Ali seems only natural. Those who despised him for his beliefs, his rhetoric and conceit still respected him, and those who loved him, not only admired him, but breathed each breath of every round he ever fought with him; his defeats were our losses, his conquests our triumphs. But sympathy is not in order here.

Champs are made to be dethroned. They are not gods and it is not only the nature of sport but the nature of life that the young shall replace the old; the strong shall replace the weak; the more competent shall replace the less competent.

Ali is a monument to the strength of human willpower. He rose from the streets of Louisville to become an olympic gold medal winner and ultimately champion of the world, fighting all who opposed him; Joe Frazier, Ken Norton, George Foreman, the U.S. Draft Board, the Federal Government, and his religion by birth — he ducked none.

He gave us moments of pain and pleasure, agony and ecstasy, love and hate, and he never denied us passion. He set a new standard that not only athletes but all who observed him must marvel at.

And in the end, it was not myth or legend, or rhetoric or knowledge that prevailed. Ali was mortal and bowed to age. The man who broke all the rules ultimately had to obey the greatest law of all; people get old. And still he went out like he came in 18 years ago, dancing proud and unshamed. His punches had lost their sting, the blows that had dropped Frazier, Foreman, and Liston were no longer effective, and he lost to a good fighter in a good fight. He went out giving all he had, it just wasn't enough this time.

But Ali will be back, he always comes back. Maybe he will give up boxing — but not fighting.

No tears for Ali, just thanks.

Johnson Provides Doctoring for Ailing Pats

By LENN ROBBINS

There was an hour delay before game time. Larry Tillery had a severe groin pull, Bill Anderson sat out with a sore foot, half the team had the flu and the 20-1 Patriots have not been playing like a 20-1 team. So Wednesday night Dwight Johnson gave the Stony Brook basketball team a refresher course on how 20-1 ballplayers are supposed to play.

The result was an 87-57 victory over New York Maritime as Johnson fired in a career high 21 points while ripping down 13 rebounds in place of the injured Anderson. "I just stepped in and did what I had to do," said Johnson.

It's a good thing the 6-6 junior was doing what he had to do because some of the other Patriots did not seem to be taking the Privateers for real. The first half was a lethargic display of sloppy basketball with the Patriots taking a 34-21 lead to the lockerroom on the strength of a Johnson three-point play with 14 seconds left. "We haven't been playing very well," admitted Captain Joe Castiglie. "We're lacking intensity."

In the past few games the Patriots have not looked like the nation's most potent offensive machine averaging nearly 100 points per game. So with less than two minutes gone in the second half, Johnson concentrated his refresher course on offense. In the next five minutes the Bronx native scored seven points including a spectacular three point play off a Mel Walker assist, giving the Patriots their biggest lead of the game, 51-32. "He's coming along real strong," said Walker. "He'll give us a big lift."

Maritime was still not ready to play victim number 20 and with 10 minutes left in the game the gap had been closed to 55-44. Once again it was Johnson to the rescue and with seven minutes left the Patriots had a 16 point lead on Johnson's double pump lay up. "It shows the type of people we have on this team," said coach Ron Bash. "Tonight Dwight did a super job."

Fifteen-Point Difference

For the rest of the game Stony Brook showed their 30.7 margin of victory was no joke outscoring the visitors 27 to 12. The win rewarded the Patriots with a number nine basketball ranking in the NCAA poll. "I'm very pleased," said Johnson. "I got the shots and took them."

With the number one ranking and the Knickerbocker Conference Championship on the line, Johnson might help the Patriots get back to top form when they go against New York Tech, a team they have never beaten, on Saturday night.

"We've been very lethargic out there," said Bash. "We're definitely the underdog but I know our guys will be up for the game. They know they have something to prove."

Molloy Finds That Warmup Is Unnecessary

By STEVE LASKOWITZ

After traveling for over two and a half hours, and getting less than five minutes to warm up, the Molloy women's basketball team might have felt it was at a disadvantage. Weariness, however, didn't dominate over sheer height as Molloy took an easy advantage over the Stony Brook women's basketball team for a 63-33 victory Wednesday night.

With the Patriots starting a relatively small lineup, Molloy's Kim Connors and Vicki Mazza were too much height for Stony Brook to handle. "The smaller players have done the job," said Patriot coach Sandy Weeden. Carolyn Hequist had 11 rebounds for us last game."

That was last game, and although the Patriots took a quick 4-2 lead on two Janet Travis set shots, Molloy's power under the offensive and defensive boards controlled the game. Connors took advantage of her height by pulling down rebounds at will and putting missed shots in.

"Our height hurt us and we try to make up for it with other dimensions, like speed and experience," said Travis who finished with 17 points. "That's where Venessa Norman comes in. She adds speed and experience and without her it hurts the team." Norman, the Patriots' starting guard sat out her second consecutive game and says she does not think she will play in tonight's game or tomorrow night's game. "I have a sprained knee and I'll be out about a week," she said. "When I start running I'll be able to tell exactly when I'll be back."

Running was something that was missing from the Patriots' game, and Weeden agrees that without Norman the team is hurting. "She has the speed to help us start and stop fast breaks, whereas the taller girls are too slow," said Weeden.

The Patriots' 1-7 record is not only indicative of their rebounding problems and Norman's absence but it also reveals that they are outclassed in their division. "I don't do any recruiting, but I may start," said Weeden. "It's hard to get girls who are willing to spend four months of hard practicing and playing in ballgames."

Stony Brook's record also reveals its lack of balance. Once again Travis had more than half of the Patriots total points. "Janet Travis always plays well," said Weeden. "She knows the game and is a true competitor who never gives up on herself."

"We play scholarship schools, and competing with them is kind of hard on us," said Travis. "That's one of the reasons we haven't been winning. If we played non-scholarship schools we might be winning a lot more games."

With Norman a doubtful starter, Patriots will have to find another dimension in their players if they want to come out of their next two games with something other than losses and a 1-9 season record.

A fencing club meeting will be held Thursday, February 23 at 3 PM in the Gym Dance Studio.

Spinks Contemplates His Future

By ED SCHUYLER JR.

Las Vegas (AP)— "I want to retire young," 24-year-old Leon Spinks said yesterday, the day after he won the heavyweight championship of the world from Muhammad Ali.

Spinks did not know his immediate plans but it looks as though they include two fights, including the rematch with Ali, despite a World Boxing Council edict that he fight Ken Norton next.

While Spinks contemplated a vacation, Ali packed for a five day public appearance tour to Bangladesh.

"I'm gonna let him have the title for a couple of months to enjoy it, then I will return," said the 36-year-old ex-champion, who is now in the position — his legs and reflexes willing — to become the first man to win the heavyweight title three times.

Spinks said he would certainly give Ali a rematch, and Top Bank Inc., the promoter of Wednesday night's upset, is planning an Ali-Spinks rematch for $5 million for each fighter.

However, Top Bank President Bob Arum plans to put Spinks in against another challenger before he meets Ali. Arum has a contract to promote Spinks' next six fights, and he didn't say where Norton is on that list.

"Norton is among the people who will be considered," Milton Chwasky, Spinks' attorney, said at a news conference yesterday.

Another news conference, scheduled by Jose Sulaiman, the WBC president, was called off.

Agreement Signed?

Sulaiman and the Norton camp say they have an agreement signed by Ali and Spinks that the winner of their fight would sign by April 5 to defend against Norton within 90 days of that date, or be stripped of title recognition.

"Are you kidding," said Arum? "Sulaiman is a joke. Spinks will fight somebody respectable next, and then fight Ali again. Spinks hasn't agreed to anything."
