Tuition Hike Tentatively Approved

$150 Increase to be Finalized Soon; Carey to Consider Plan

By Howard Saltz

A $150-a-year tuition increase was approved Wednesday by the executive committee of the SUNY Board of Trustees and will receive final approval from the full Board later this month, a SUNY spokesman said.

The increase, which is effective in the fall semester, brings tuition for New York State resident undergraduates at all SUNY schools to $1,050 a year. Tuition for New York State graduate students was also tentatively increased from $1,400 to $1,700. A tuition increase for out-of-state students also received approval.

The increases were approved 4 to 1 by the executive committee, with James Stern, the only student representative to the Board, dissenting. The full 16-member Board will meet on Feb. 24 and 25 and is expected to approve the executive committee's decision, according to the spokesman, who requested that his name not be used. The executive committee is empowered to increase tuition, the spokesman said, but the Board will make the formal decision.

The executive committee's action authorizes SUNY Chancellor Clifton Wharton to request that the money generated by the tuition increase—about $20 million—be used to offset some of the cuts that would be imposed by Gov. Hugh Carey's proposed 1981-82 budget. Wharton must speak with Carey by Feb. 20—the deadline for amendments to the budget.

According to the SUNY spokesman, the executive committee suggested that the money from higher tuition be divided among cutback areas, with $6.8 million used to restore 401 of the 442 eliminated faculty positions and $8.1 million used to replace equipment and repair buildings. The rest, the spokesman said, could be used instead of money-generating proposals in the bidget that include having resident assistants pay for their rooms, creating new student fees, and cutting teaching assistants' tuition waivers. The spokesman said that there was "reasonable expectation" that Carey would accept the proposed amendments and a Carey spokesman indicated the same.

Carye's SUNY budget, $967.5 million, was a $79.4 million increase over last year but about $57 million less than SUNY requested. In addition, only $40 million of the increase was from state money, the rest being based on SUNY generating its own income.

The tuition increase came exactly two weeks after the trustees raised the dormitory rent, also by $150 a year. In addition, the trustees voted last spring to raise the dormitory rent an additional $300 in an effort to make the dormitories self-supporting. That decision is being challenged in court by the Students Association of the State University on the grounds that the trustees held the meeting in violation of the state's open meeting laws.

According to the SUNY spokesman, the Board discussed three options at its January meeting: accept Carey's budget with its cutbacks, raise tuition, or have the State Legislature reject the budget. The trustees considered the first option unacceptable and the third unlikely. "We are still going to go to the Legislature," the spokesman said. "We are going to try to ask them to restore as much as they can." However, he said, the trustees "didn't expect too much response" from the Legislature, and opted for the tuition increase.

The tuition increase has drawn concern here. "I don't like it but it's better than some of the things in the governor's executive budget that it will be traded for," said University President John Marburger. "My ultimate reaction is that it was inevitable whether we like it or not."

Polity President Rich Zuckerman, however, opposed the increase. "I am opposed to any increase in fees without any increases in service," he said. "I find it unconscionable that we're being charged more every single year while we're having our semester reduced, our infirmary hours cut and our faculty positions slashed. Maybe it makes sense to Albany, but it doesn't make sense to me." The matter will be discussed by the Future of Stony Brook Committee at its meeting Monday night.

Committee to Probe Security/Student Relations

A committee aimed at establishing better relations between Public Safety and students held its first meeting Tuesday night.

The Public Safety Student Relations Committee was formed during a Polity Senate meeting last semester, "in response to student complaints in the Polity Legal Clinic as well as on the Polity Hotline claiming mistreatment by Public Safety," according to Camillo Giannattasio, the Polity lawyer and attorney for the committee.

The main purpose of the six-student committee, said chairman Babak

CAMILLO GIANNATTASIO

Movahedi, is to collect and review cases of student-officer interactions.

A student who has had any encounters with Public Safety, negative or positive has the opportunity to relate them to the committee, or if they choose, they may contact Giannattasio personally. All calls to the lawyer and discussions with the committee will be kept in the strictest confidence

"The committee will pass no judgment, make no recommendations," said Giannattasio. "It hopes to put together case histories of students who have had any contact with Public Safety, whether they were arrested or not, and whether they were mistreated or not."

"We hope to reduce the amount of complaints from students regarding the actions and attitudes of the Department of Public Safety, in addition to improving the relationship," said Movahedi. "Also, we hope to have full cooperation from the department."

According to Giannattasio, the goal of the committee is to eventually "review the case histories and make recommendations," as far as what legal action, if any, be pursued. The findings would be forwarded to the director of Public Safety.

Memos announcing the committee have been sent to Paul Madonna, who is overseeing Public Safety, officers of the Department, University President John Marburger, James Black, vice-president for University Affairs, Elizabeth Wadsworth, vice-president for Student Affairs and Polity President Rich Zuckerman.

Movahedi stated that the importance of the committee is fully realized, as it is the only committee the Polity lawyer fully participates in.

Giannattasio said that "the committee is only as important as the students make

Popular HSC Professor Leaving Amid Conflicts

By Michael Rowe

Research Associate Professor Stanley Masiak, described by students as "one of the best instructors I've had, probably the best," will be leaving the Health Sciences Center after this semester amidst charges of professional and personal conflicts with his department chairman.

Masiak, an 11-year veteran of the Department of Physiology, has been working "year by year, sometimes month by month," since his tenure was denied five years ago, according to Department Chairman William Van Der Kloot. Funding for Masiak's work had been coming from private concerns, the School of Allied Health Professions, and the School of Medicine. This year, Van Der Kloot said the money has run out. Masiak, aware that his contract will not be renewed, has not applied for private funding during the past year.

Many students do not feel the decision not to renew Masiak's contract has a solid fiscal basis. Last year, in a very similiar situation, a petition was circulated and 400 signatures were obtained demanding that the University retain Masiak. This year, student organizations are gearing up for the "hundred to one shot" of keeping Masiak at Stony Brook.

John Britelli, class representative for the school of Basic Sciences, said that he believes Masiak was singled-out for dismissal due to his field of research. Britelli charges that Van Der Kloot does not want funding moving from the neurosciences into Masiak's speciality. Van Der Kloot denies this, saying that his department is representative of many varied interests.

According to Paul Lefevre, also from the Department of Physiology, "almost half the department is concerned" with neurological research, while he and Masiak perform research on cell membranes.

Masiak said he does not foresee staying at Stony Brook after this semester, and he is currently looking toward industry for his career.

Masiak's students say his absence will be missed, and without his instruction "not just the students would suffer, the patients would suffer as well."

TV Tower Coming Down

By Glenn Taverna

The transmitting tower and receiving dish of Channel 21, located adjacent to South P-lot, will be moved soon, but the place it will be relocated to is still being reviewed.

During the past few months, field tests have been conducted by an engineering firm to determine the best site for relocation. Although a final report has been submitted to the station, the question of cost has resulted in a review of the firm's findings.

"The move would cost many thousands of dollars more than anticipated," said Station Manager Arthur Gillick. "However, our intentions are still the same. We have an informal commitment to resolve the situation as soon as possible while trying to lower the cost."

In addition to the problems of cost, timing is another factor which is delaying the start of the project. The ground must be in shape before any excavation can be started, according to Gillick, and if the project were to begin now, any delays because of bad weather would only raise the cost. "Spring is obviously an informal deadline for the start of the project," he said.

Ma Bell Office Coming to SB

By Nancy J. Hyman

For Stony Brook students, the days of mailing out phone bills or driving to the bank in town to pay them may be over.

According to Ellen Borah, telecommunications manager for the campus, New York Telephone will have representative on campus on Tuesdays and Thursdays to answer any questions about telephone service and to receive payment on monthly bills. She added that the representative will only accept checks and money orders and that he will be there from 1 PM to 4 PM, and processing paperwork accumulated from the day from 4 PM to 5 PM.

Borah said the system was set up due to a problem with students trying to obtain information by dialing the telephone company's campus number because they almost always receive a busy signal. In addition, many students returned for the semester to find that their phones had been turned off for non-payment of bills. This occurred because the regular billing cycle overlapped with intersession and students received their bills past the due

Compiled by Meteorologists Dave Dabour and Peter Frank (Courtesy of the Stony Brook Weather Observatory.) Summary

With the exception of a storm moving into the Pacific Northwest, the rest of the nation is rain-free. Old Man Winter is finally easing his grip on the Northeast as milder weather spreads into the Midwest. We're about to get a taste of that mild weather this weekend, along with lots of sunshine and gentle southerly breezes; the mercury may even approach 50 degrees on Sunday. So, if Cupid's arrow doesn't get you this weekend, maybe an early touch of spring-like weather will. Forecast:

Today: Sunny with seasonable temperatures. Highs in the mid Tonight: Clear and chilly. Lows in the upper teens to low 20s. Saturday: Mostly sunny and milder. Highs 40-45.

Sunday: Partly sunny, breezy, and pleasantly mild. Highs in the upper 40s to around 50.

Monday's Outlook: Chance of rain or showers.

The best relocation site, Gillick said, would be adjacent to the station's broadcasting center in Plainview where it would be easier and less costly to maintain. A meeting between the Corporation for Public Broadcasting and the station's trustees is still pending. The outcome, Gillick said, will probably produce a statement which may resolve the difficulties and finalize details of the relocation.

Local residents have opposed the tower for a long time, charging that it is an eyesore.

MSRC Program to Aid West African Nations

By Christine Foley he Marine Science Rese

The Marine Science Research Center, at the requent and funding of the United Nations, is preparing an intensive workshop on coastal management techniques for 19 West African countries. The most important aspect of the project, which is tentatively scheduled for the fall, according to Professor Peter Weyl is, "using science to help develop an underdeveloped coast-line, to look ahead where one still has the opportunity and avoid past mistakes. The real challenge when developing new areas is to make better use of natural resources."

"using science to help develop an underdeveloped coast-line, to look ahead where one still has the opportunity and avoid past Marine Science Director, Jerry Schubel, said, "since there isn't much development on the coast, with accurate management planning, one can accommodate many uses. For example, in Nigeria oil mining is important and with proper planning one can develop a refinery and still conserve an area for recreation and fisheries."

The idea of coastline management is necessary for port development because of the importance of international trade. The area to be dealt with is 7,000 kilometers of the West African Coast. There are two problems in developing the area. First, some parts of the coast are high energy areas and have a continuously shifting sand base. The second is the tremendous urbanization along the coast especially in coastal lagoons where there is little or no sewage, causing the pollution problem.

The project will use science and a new computer technique to determine effective coastal management. The first step in the project will be sending graduate student Jeff Schaefer on a technical field trip to gather data on the coastline. The data will then be converted into a workbook by Schubel and Stony Brook Professor Lee Koppelman, who is also the experimental director of the Long Island Regency Planning Board. The book, written in French and English, will deal with the planning and future management of the coastline.

Each of the 19 West African countries can send two representatives. The United Nations advised that the one a be a policy maker and the other a technical or scientific person.

The United Nations chose Stony Brook's Marine Science Research Center to do the project because they have done projects for them in the past and is the only center that specializes in coastal areas. It is hoped that this will also improve relations with other countries and give other students a chance to work on projects in foreign countries.

Engineering Exec Committee

Considers Student Input

By Richard Bourbeau

The Engineering Executive Committee is considering giving representation to graduate and undergraduate students, non-tenured faculty members and non-teaching professionals.

According to Committee Chairman Daniel Dicker, "we have sent memos to all faculty members (of the College of Engineering and Applied Sciences) and are waiting for their responses." If the response is favorable, the committee will consider amending its bylaws in order to give these groups representation.

To amend the by-laws, the proposal formulated by the committee will have to be approved by the entire faculty college.

In the interim, Dan Wartenberg, chairman of the Graduate Student Organization (GSO), has requested, in a memo to Dicker, that the GSO be permitted to send a representative to attend the meetings as an observer. According to Wartenberg, "this representative will bridge the communication gap between the students and the faculty."

"This request will be discussed at the committee's February meeting," said Dicker. He added that if the by-laws are amended, the decision probably would not be made until the next academic year.

Currently, only tenured faculty members are allowed on the committee and permitted to attend the meetings which have such a great influence on so many students.

The committee would not even be considering the matter if the GSO had not decided to send its vice-chairman, Jacob Stein, to the committee's November meeting.

Stein said that after several inquiries were made by Wartenberg to determine whether the GSO was entitled to representation on the committee, he was invited to its November meeting and was sent a copy of the agenda two days later.

"I was never treated so rudely in my life," said Stein of the meeting. "He (John Bilello, dean of College of Engineering and Applied Sciences) ranted and raved about his not being informed of my invitation."

Although he denied any rude behavior, Bilello did admit that he questioned Stein's presence at the meeting. At this point the by-laws were consulted and they held true to Bilello's contention that students were not permitted to attend such meetings.

According to Dicker, "I then apologized to Jacob (Stein) and asked him to leave." Dicker has since explained that he had received a phone call from Stein asking him when the November meeting was going to be held and informing him of Stein's intention to attend the meeting. Dicker, being a new member of the committee, had been unfamiliar with the by-laws and thus, did not question Stein's intention to attend. However, Dicker denies having invited Stein.

Stein and Wartenberg said they are concerned about the slow deliberation with which the committee is pursuing this issue, claiming they were told they would have to plead their case before the committee, but they have not been informed of the scheduling of the meeting. Dicker contends that the committee has yet to decide whether or not to allow them to attend.

According to Wartenberg, "being students at the University is sufficient reason for representation."

Ultimately, it will be the faculty that will decide the outcome of this issue, and with it, the fate of engineering students for years to come.

Budget Cuts

Pose Difficult Choice

No one likes price hikes, especially when the resulting increases, barely maintain services at an existing level. But no one is exempt from them either, including students in the SUNY system.

Unfortunately, inflation, a household word these days, is sending costs soaring and effecting every facet of the economy. Inflation has become a national obsession, an issue which dominated the recent election and the current political scene.

But until it can be stemmed, slowed, or stopped, institutions such as Stony Brook will either have to raise more revenue or severly cut services.

Raising tuition seems like the most likely and the easiest solution to the problem. There are, for sure, other ways to make up deficits. But they are equally, and in some cases, more undesirable than raising tuition — for instance, cutting out state tuition waivers for graduate students.

Our reaction to the tuition increase is similar to University's President John Marburger's. We "don't like it but it's better than some of the things in the governor's executive budget that it will be traded for."

Tuition increases are a fact of life these days. Every university in the country is going through budget difficulties. Stony Brook is no exception.

This is not to say that we should sit with idle complacency as prices rise all around use. We must act. But we must harness our energies and tackle the problem at its roots. And the root of the problem does not lie with Stony Brook, Gov. Hugh Carey or SUNY central. The tuition increase is a product of our times. Inflation is a national and international problem. Until the problem of inflation can be solved, tuition increases are inevitable.

We are concerned by the tuition increase. We would hope that all steps are being taken to cut any excess waste and trim costs. But we would also like to see Stony Brook survive as an outstanding institution. We would like to preserve its achievements and continue to strive for excellence. To do this, we may all have to pay a few extra dollars.

Unhealthy Values

To the Editor:

In response to Crime Round-up, does our society tolerate crime to the point that we allow stealing and wrongdoings to be ignored?

The typical Stony Brook student steals out of insatiable greed — lust for the material. Who realizes that we at Stony Brook are representative of an elite minority? People seem to shun the reality that two-thirds of the world exist as peasant societies.

The crime and unhealthy values that are exposed in this university make me doubt that I will be proud to say I have received a degree from Stony Brook University.

D. Pescatore

Oppose The Referendum

To the Editor:

Next Polity election, students will vote on 10 referenda placed on the ballot. One of these reads: "No referendum shall be run concerning the specific earmarking of student activity fees." This referendum I oppose and should be opposed by all students as another infringement on our rights.

As a student at StonyBrook for the past 1½ years I've witnessed a great reduction in the decision-making powers of the students, for example, the closing of campus bars. More and more priveleges are being away, while more restrictions are being implemented. I feel the referendum is another example based on this same theme. In essence, the students will not be able to decide what to do with their own money. This defeats the purpose of a referendum. Instead these decisions will be left up to the Polity Budget Committee and their prejudices. One only has to remember the many troubles of the 1980 summer budget committee.

My first complaint is that a few people will be deciding how to spend a great deal of our money. Secondly, this is an example of more power we will have lost — a loss we cannot "afford."

In the past, Stony Brook students have always had the opportunity to hold referenda to redistribute the activity fee for specific amounts. We have never shown ourselves to be incompetent. Actually there has never been a problem due to the students' misallocation of funds. In my opinion, this makes the upcoming referendum not only a threat, but totally unnecessary.

Stony Brook is one school where if students choose to, they can have more freedom and control. I hope you will join me in voting 'No' on the referendum. Directing our own activity fee is not a privilege but our right.

Small Salary

To the Editor:

Question: What university position earns an annual salary much smaller than that earned by a mail and supply clerk ($7,195), a janitor ($9,905), a stenographer ($8,432), a residence hall director ($9,029), a typist ($8,667), a bus driver ($9,895), and an account clerk ($7,990)?

And yet teaches classes, prepares examinations and grades papers?

Answer: A graduate teaching assistant. My 1980 salary for example, was $4,326.

Second question: Why were teaching assistants excluded from Benjamin Berry's otherwise insightful compilation of 112 "Salaries at Stony Brook" (Statesman, Feb. 9)? I submit that his "sample of salaries here at Stony Brook" does not completely cover "a full range of employees" at the university. Better luck next

Ralph W. Bastedo, M.A.
Ph.D. Candidate (Editor's Note: The salaries of teaching assistants are listed on an hourly wage basis in the state salary book. It would have been very difficult to compute a yearly figure.)

My magnificent magical mistress—
Many men merely meet masly mediocre muck mannered makebelieve monstrosities. Man must make mature, moralitic, melodius, and meaningful matches. To mine myself, mine means much more.
Managing to manifest many memorable moments, my mate maintains my moderately mellow moods. Meticulousty minimizing messy make-up, her masterpiece mug mysteriously melts millions of men's manhood into mad mania. Might I mention, mighty magical massages mend my maladapted musculature, moving my mind in misbellef.
Monthly, moonlit midnight's milieu (minus marijuana) magnify mutual mixed emotions. Meanwhile, mother mi scellaneously mentions monogamous mistakes manufacturing momentary mixed marriages. May mankind mimic your merits. Mine till millenium, —Mary

Championship Cup At Home

By Steven Weinstein

Despite playing six matches in four days and traveling over 800 miles, the Stony Brook Squash Team returned home, posting a 4-2 record for the trip. They also brought home with them, the Wesleyan Cup, which they traditionally vie for every year.

The Patriots opened the trip against Massachusetts Institute of Technology on Thursday, Feb. 5, and came out with a well-deserved 6-3 win. They then moved on to Wesleyan University to take on Trinity, Franklin and Marshall, and Wesleyan for the Cup.

Stony Brook first won the Cup in 1977 and has had it in it's possession for three of the last four years. They easily defeated Franklin and Marshall, 8-1, and then went on to down Wesleyan 5-4. In the final match against Trinity, with the score knotted at four apiece, Patriot Fred Kelsey pulled out a grueling win to give the Cup to Stony Brook. "Fred played a great match," stated captain Neal Vohr," and he pulled it out, winning 12-15, 15-9, 12-15, 15-12 and 15-7.

Possibly suffering a letdown after four straight wins, or just feeling the aches of the hectic weekend, the Pats were setback by Tufts University and Williams College, 8-1 and 7-2 respectively. Only Don Gottfried could manage a win against Tufts, while Vohr and Dave Roggen pulled out victories against Williams.

Coach Bob Snider was very happy with the weekend's results. "We won four matches and returned the Wesleyan Cup to Stony Brook," stated Snider. "The team played very well and they are beginning to look much better."

"Everybody did a fine job," added Fred Kelsey. "Vohr won five of the six matches he played and Dave Roggen also had a good weekend."

Roggen went 5-1 on the trip while Kelsey and Gottfried each won four matches. Greg Burton played at .500 as Larry Gottlieb and George Collins each had two victories. Serge Cosmai and Asan Khan played admirably, but they could only reach the victory circle once.

Stony Brook is now 10-6 on the season and they have three remaining road games before the Metropolitan Championships and the Nationals on Feb. 27.

Intramural B-Ball: Douglas Defeats

By Lisa Napell

Defending champions in the race for the title of Intramural basketball champs, Douglas B trounced Langmuir D-1 Tuesday, 33-23. In reference to their romp over Langmuir, Richie Bower said "they weren't much, it wasn't a big game."

The Douglas team, which consists of forwards Bower and Adam Sezkley; guards Steve Maloney, who is also the coach, Doug Nuzzio and Fung Lon; and centers Bob Florio and Larry Gottleib, plan to enter the palyoffs. "We plan to go into the finals" said Bower. "We think we're good enough."

In order to win the finals and retain their championship status, the men from Douglas must defeat Mount College. Mount has in it's favor the Basketball magic of ex-varsity player Heywood Mitchell. "We're ready to play Mount" remarked Bower "they're favored to win but we think we can beat them."

Patriots

players down our throats. The AIM program can play an instrumental role in a basketball program but I'm not going to admit someone just because they're a ballplayer. His recruitment is shaky and unorganized."

Meanwhile, even if Bash had abused the AIM program, at least everyone of his ballplayers has received a degree from this University. "Bash used to make us show him our grades every semester; Kendall used to go behind our back and check up on our grades," said Mitchell. Even so, Eugene

Treadwell, one of Kendall's only recruiting successes, failed out of StonyBrook after two semesters and Mark Brown, another former Patriot who played under Kendall, still has not received a degree.

"You know, after we were defeated by Potsdam 78-79 in the Regionals, the athletic department asked us if they should give Kendall another chance," said Tillery. "I didn't want to be the one to tell them to get rid of him, so I just said 'give him another chance and let him prove his worth to you."

(This is the completion of the three part series.)

The Inside Track

Make A Decision Pick A Sportscaster

By Raymond Stallone

In retrospect, the dismal track record registered in last November's presidential election by virtually all of the major pollsters, reinforced the prevailing opinion held by many polling critics. "You cannot always count on a small sampling to serve as an accurate barometer for the entire nation, but you sure can fool a lot of people with slick polling techniques and a stylish presentation."

With that in mind, The Inside Track will throw itself into the crowded ring of pollsters by surveying readers on one of today's most significant issues — Who is the best television sportscaster in New York?

Without question, the last thing the vast majority of readers plan to do this weekend is fill out the ballot, clip it and mail it to Statesman. However, as an inducement for reader response, the Inside Track will select three entries at random on Feb. 23, and award the winners a gift package, courtesy of the University's Alumni Association.

On that rousing note, let's proceed with the inaugural poll of television sportscasters in New York.

Ironically, most people on campus spend more time listening to the radio than watching television, but as far as sportscasting is concerned, the impact of television far exceeds the range of radio. Thus, this poll will be devoted exclusively to the video sector.

Despite the risk of influencing the decision-making process, here's a brief sketch of the metropolitan area's major sportscasters in alphabetical sequence.

Marve Albert (WNBC-Ch. 4): The consummate play-by-play announcer, Albert handles assignments in football, basketball and hockey in addition to daily sports reports on Newscenter 4. A native New Yorker, Albert has opened up over the years and is now much more colorful and opinionated. He does not suffer in comparison to his brothers, Al Albert (WNBC-Ch. 4) and Steve Albert (WOR-Ch. 9).

Len Berman (WCBS-Ch. 2): Recruited from New England, Berman does a masterful job with the hectic weekend sports schedule. A rising star at CBS Sports, Berman was rewarded with his own program, Sports Update, on Sunday evenings.

Jerry Girard (WPIX-Ch. 11): Vitriolic, saucy and sarcastic only begins to describe Girard's patented style. An old-fashioned muckraker, Girard spices up his commentaries with biting criticism and dry humor. An example is the time he offered to meet the Boston Red Sox at LaGuardia airport with Yankee highlights on the eve of a late September matchup during the red-hot pennant race of 1978.

Bruce King (WABC-Ch.7): Hauled in from Seattle last summer, King was faced with the unenviable task of making Eyewitness News viewers forget about Warner Wolff. They still have not forgotten. A likable fellow, King specializes in pursuing timely one-on-one interviews. Unlike his predecessor, he enjoys leaving the studios and tracking down a story.

Bill Mazer (WNEW-Ch. 5): The dean of New York area sportscasters, Mazer has done it all in a lengthy but non-controversial career. A calm and reassuring individual, Mazer has built a well earned reputation as a sports trivia king. He isn't called "Amazin" for nothing.

Warner Wolff (WCBS-Ch. 2): The Big W is currently the hottest sportscaster in America. A bust at the ABC Sports network, Wolff has found his niche as a local, rather than a national, sportscaster. Utilizing an enthusiastic delivery style with a superb sense of imagination, Wolff has parlayed his unique talent into a million dollar career. WCBS induced Wolff to leave WABC last summer to the tune of $400,000 a year. A showboat who occasionally goes off the deep end, the diminutive Wolff has boosted WCBS into the lead in the all-important ratings game.

For better or worse, this corps of announcers serves as the most influential electronic sports reporters in the metropolitan area. Who's your favorite?

Patriot Basketball Part III

Reflecting on the Past

By Lenn Robbins

Three years ago, Ray Stallone, the University's Sports Information Director and I were standing on a street corner in Rock Island, Illinois, site of the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) Division III basketball championships. It was just a few minutes after 11 PM and a police car pulled up and asked us what we were doing. After producing some identification showing who we were and that we were with the Stony Brook basketball team, the officer accepted our story but explained that we were violating the town's 11 PM curfew and would have to return to our hotel rooms or spend the night in the Rock Island County Jailhouse.

We thanked the officer for informing us, trying to sound as polite as possible, as he slowly replaced the two foot night stick in his belt loop, and told him we would see him again next year. We were wrong.

Last year, Stallone and I were standing in the lobby of a female dormitory in the Potsdam State College, site of the NCAA Eastern Regional Tournament when a security officer approached us and asked us what our business was. Once again we went through the identification process, thanked him for not retaining us and told him we would see him again next year. Once again, we were wrong.

"Our chances for making the playoffs this year are extremely slim." said Stallone. "We have lost many Division III games." A lot of other things have happened in quite some time. For the first time in five years the Patriots, in addition to probably not qualifying for the playoffs, were beaten by a City University of New York team, (Brooklyn, 81-71). In his reign as head coach, Dick Kendall's squad has failed to take first place in any one of the team's last eight tournaments. With a 13-9 record, a loss to any of the Patriots' remaining four opponents, New York Tech, Adelphi University, SUNY at Old Westbury and Manhattanville College will leave Stony Brook with its most losses in five years.

"A 13-9 record isn't all that good and it isn't all that bad," said James Black, vice-president for University Affairs. "If the student athlete is enjoying the program and learning from intercollegiate athletics, the program is most successful."

"I spent three years sitting on the bench here and I was proud because I was sitting behind great ballplayers," said Heyward Mitchell. "My last year I got to start and play under Kendall and that was the most unenjoyable year I've had here. After three great years, my last one made me regret playing here. I played here four years and the man doesn't even say hello to me now."

Obviously something has gone wrong in the past several years to reverse the trend of basketball success at StonyBrook. In four years under Ron Bash, the Patriots record went from 2-22 to 15-11 to 21-6 and finally to 27-4 forth place finish in the nation. Under Kendall, the team's record declined from 24-3 to 19-9 to its present 13-9. Next year?

"Kendall doesn't deserve any credit for any of our victories his first year," said ex-Patriot Larry Tillery. "The team was playing on our own merits. We won those first 23 games because we had better talent. Now he doesn't have any stars to rely on and look what's happening. They should have made the playoffs this year and they shouldn't have nine losses. There is no motivation on his team, no knowledge of the game on his part. The downfall is coming and I knew it would happen. The program is sinking right around him. As a basketball alumnus I think it is a disgrace."

While Kendall refused to speak to me, in an interview with another Statesman reporter, Kendall defended his record by stating that this year's Patriot schedule is harder that it was under Bash. Certainly this is one of the more difficult schedules in Patriot history, however, now the weaker schools that at one time were no problem for Stony Brook, are now formidible opponents.

Under Bash, the Patriots would humiliate Division III teams like Hunter 91-73 or defeat Division II schools like Southampton, 73-63. Under Kendall, Stony Brook had to pray that Hunter shot would fall short at the buzzer to preserve a 76-74 win. This year, the Patriots lost a one point decision to Southampton in overtime. On the surface that doesn't appear to be anything to be ashamed of until one becomes aware of the fact that Southampton had a 2-18 record.

"He uses no strategy at all," said a starting Patriot who wishes to remain annonomous. "He does nothing to get us back in a game if we fall behind. He recognizes nothing strategically, he has no enthusiasm as a coach."

"When you're sitting on the bench as a player, sometimes you don't realize why you're losing, you can't see what's going wrong out there but a coach is supposed to," said another ballplayer who also wished not to be identified. "Once I got a chance to sit in the stands I saw some of the moves he made and I couldn't believe it. There's no discipline at all on this team. No one respects him. If you're not respected you can't have discipline and if you don't have discipline you can't have any strategy. Sometimes he doesn't even come into the lockerroom after a game and tell us what we did wrong or right. He definitely has to get out of the program."

In contrast, John Ramsey, acting Physical Education Director, "I think considering the fact that Coach Kendall is only part time he has done a very successful job with the time he has to work with. It is very difficult to compete with someone who is on a full time schedule."

"Whether he was full time or not, I don't think he could command the respect and discipline that's needed to run a basketball program," said a Patriot who wished to remain annonomous.

When questioned by another reporter about Stony Brook's lack of successful recruiting, Kendall blamed Bash's abuse of the AIM program for his recruiting shortcomings, "I can't even use AIM kids anymore, I'm suffering for what he did," Kendall said. However, according to the assistant director of the AIM program, Thomas Morales, Kendall himself is the one to blame.

"Bash might have had an easier time using the program because at the time neither myself nor the director, William Harvey, were here. However, I have invited Kendall up here many times to discuss the program," Morales said. "The man has no recruitment program. I don't let anyone use the AIM program but I'm more than willing to work with him. Instead of coming to us during the recruitment cycle and telling us he has four or five ballplayers he's considering, he shows up in August with incomplete applications and tries to shove
