Snowstorm Turns Campus Operations Upside Down

By IAN COOK Statesman Staff

The snowstorm that blanketed the campus last Sunday and Monday gave students a four-day weekend, but left some university staff scrambling to solve problems. Throughout the week, parts of the campus remained difficult to traverse.

With nearly two feet of snow accumulation, cleanup crews created giant mounds of snow, obstructing parking lots and walkways. Many resident students have had to find new routes to class, and residents with cars found themselves "plowed in."

But the challenges met by the average student are small when compared to the obstacles some disabled students face.

"Stony Brook has tried to be as accessible to disabled students as possible," said Joanna Harris, the Director of Disability Support Services (DSS). "We're all trying to be very patient."

Of the 550 Stony Brook students with self-identified disabilities, 15 to 20 percent have mobility problems, Harris said. Because of the storm, students in wheelchairs were forced to spend three days indoors and had to have meals delivered. Because of the skeleton staff at Campus Dining Services, RHDs delivered food and in general were very supportive of the disabled students, she added.

According to Harris, the snowstorm made life even harder for blind students who get around with the help of Seeing Eye dogs.

Many paths used by blind students, paths which their dogs are accustomed to following, are covered in snow.

The Student Health Center weathered the storm "without anything unusual." The center had difficulty getting staff in and had shortened hours, but didn't have any storm-related patients, an employee said.

Residential Safety Patrol (RSP) remained open during the storm, said RSP employee Emanuel Gymafi. RSP's walk service was in operation, and desk monitors living in the buildings they monitor were expected to work, Gymafi said. RSP sent out a few staff members with a pick and shovel to help make sure that residence hall doors could properly open and close.

efforts, some students stranded in their rooms for three days. noticed that their desk monitors didn't show up. "I was disappointed to see that there was no monitor at the entrance to my building," said freshman Caroline LaManna, a resident of Cardozo College.

The Student Activities Center and Union dining facilities were closed on Monday and Tuesday, and residential dining halls had shortened hours as a result of the storm.

Campus Dining Services (CDS) decided to close the SAC and Union for two reasons, said Lisa Ospitale, the Director of Marketing for CDS.

"There wasn't enough staff, and there wouldn't have been customers," she said. The SAC serves largely faculty and commuter students, who weren't on campus, she added. "We didn't want to make the food and then have to throw it away."

In total, CDS employs about 220 associates and managers and 200 students at any given time, Ospitale said. The SAC and Union staff who came to work were sent to help in residential dining halls.

There were no significant shortages of food during the storm, she said, adding that CDS maintains stores of food that will last several days in case of an event like a major snowstorm.

Unraveling Myths About Volunteering at SBU Hospital

BY KIMBERLY MEILAK Statesman Staff

Volunteer Coordinator at Stony Brook University Hospital and 1992 Stony Brook graduate Kim Kress wants to spread the word about the volunteer program at Stony Brook University Hospital to students and other community members.

"From my own experience, I've found that people have many myths about what volunteering is really about," Kress said.

Kress explained that she believes these assumptions dissuade people from volunteering. Many individuals, she said, wrongly think that they have to devote excessive hours to volunteering or that they have little choice in what types of work they can do.

"The program is open to anyone who is looking to help someone and can offer the hospital some type of commitment," Kress said.

The Volunteer program at SBU Hospital is open to high school students, who serve as Junior Volunteers, college students and anyone else who wishes to lend a hand. There are a variety of jobs and offices that have positions for interested individuals. Volunteers can work anywhere from the information desk where they greet and direct visitors to the blood bank where they help organize blood drives. The hospital does ask that volunteers donate a minimum of three hours a week for at least eight months.

Kress described the process of becoming a volunteer. Applicants need to complete an interview, a health session and orientation. She described the interview as an informational session in which she looks for an interest in helping people and an overall pleasant demeanor.

Kress will celebrate 10 years of serving as Volunteer Coordinator in July. She said that the hospital is always looking for and taking in volunteers.

"I go to school and community centers to explain the program to anyone who is interested and in hope that it will bring more volunteers to the hospital," she said.

When asked what she hoped volunteers got out of completing the service Kress emphasized "the feeling that they've accomplished something as well as helped others in need."

Kress described her own experience as a volunteer for SBU Hospital. She worked at the informational desk when she was a student at Patchogue-Medford High School, and enjoyed the experience. Kress said she went home every night feeling good because she had helped someone.

The best way for college students to get into the volunteer program is to plan ahead, she said, because some offices and departments fill up quickly.

"It's best to apply to become a volunteer in the beginning of the semester when appointments will be easier to attain," Kress said.

Kress said that the Volunteer Program has been a success. In November of 2002, over 1,000 hours of volunteer service were donated to the hospital.

"Volunteers provide patients with the one-on-one attention that sometimes staff can not provide at the moment, but is just as important as the medical attention they're here for," Kress said.

Research to Benefit Astronauts, Osteoperosis Patients

By Anjali Dogra Statesman Editor

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) presented Stefan Judex, Ph.D., Assistant Professor in Stony Brook University's Department of Biomedical Engineering, with a three-year research award totaling $764,073.

Judex received the grant for the study entitled, "The Genetic Basis of the Loss of Musculo-Skeletal Tissue During Weightlessness: Towards the Identification of Individuals that are at Greatest Risk," which will attempt to identify specific regions on chromosomes that predispose individuals to excessive bone or muscle mass loss during long-term space flight.

The loss of bone and muscle under reduced gravity condition is a major stumbling block to man's extended presence in space. The health and well being of astronauts is severely compromised when they return to Earth because of the tremendous bone and muscle loss suffered in space.

"NASA is committed to selecting research that will help to solve problems humans face in space flight," said Guy Fogleman, Ph.D., Acting Director, Bioastronautics Research Division. "We look forward to working with Dr. Judex to help NASA achieve this goal."

Bone loss similar to that which astronauts experience during space travel afflicts millions of people during periods of bed rest and immobilization on Earth. This osteoporosis varies between individuals and it is believed that genetic variations can account for most of this variability.

"This award will be fundamental in advancing Dr. Judex's research in identifying the role genetics plays in bone loss, and which is a key etiologic factor in the osteoporosis that haunts millions of Americans," said Dr. Clinton T. Rubin, Chair of Stony Brook's Department of Biomedical Engineering, "Further, I believe this award represents a firm indication of the cutting edge research that our Department and Stony Brook University are pioneering in areas of space science."

Professors Forming Unions University Divide: Part-time

BY SCOTT SMALLWOOD The Chronicle of Higher Education

To the students, they're all just professors. The title-adjunct, associate, assistant—has little meaning when the professor is giving a test or grading a paper. But outside the classroom, there's a hierarchy cast in stone. Part-time and full-time faculty members live in separate worlds. They have different priorities and different dreams.

In one corner are the part-time professors, who teach an ever-larger percentage of classes. They're sure that the colleges are riding on the backs of their cheap labor. In the other corner are the full-timers. who believe that they remain the core of the faculty, whatever the percentages. They're the ones teaching the advanced courses, doing research, and participating in all those committees that keep colleges running.

As part-timers flock to unions, these differences are rearing their heads within the labor movement. Part-timers are considering the best way to negotiate with administrators. Should they join forces with full-timers, gaining strength in numbers? Or should they strike out on their own, protecting a voice that might get drowned out in a larger union?

The answer differs across the country. At Nassau Community College, on Long Island, N.Y., the two groupsabout 1,300 adjuncts and 500 full-time professors—have had a sometimes acrimonious relationship. The annual salaries of full professors there average more than $84,000, according to data from the American Association of University Professors.

After being in the same union with full-timers in the 1970s, the adjuncts broke away nearly 20 years ago. Robert Gaudino, a part-time history professor at Nassau since 1965, remembers once asking a full-time colleague why the two camps always seemed to be at each other's throats.

"He said, 'This is our college, not yours. You're like interlopers. You're the academic grape pickers," As a result, Gaudino is certain that part-timers are better off on their own. "Full-timers are not interested in the well-being of adjuncts," he said. "It's just not on their radar."

Historically, however, adjuncts have been included in faculty unions at some public institutions. Adjuncts at private colleges like

NYU have recently unionized—a move that their full-time colleagues probably can't duplicate because of federal law.

The part-timers have galvanized around the obvious issues: pay and benefits. More than 70 percent make less than $3,000 per course, according to a 1999 study by a coalition of academic associations. About two-thirds of the departments in the study offer adjuncts no benefits-no health insurance, no retirement plan.

Adjuncts are also pushing for more job security, hiring preference for experienced professors, and better grievance procedures.

"The goal of the part-time faculty is to get rid of the two-tier system, to professionalize the use of all faculty," said Chris Storer, a legislative analyst for the California Part-Time Faculty Association.

Military Action: The Time is Now

How should the United States deal with Iraq? Should the military be involved or should negotiations continue? I firmly believe that in dealing with a regime that has a history of aggression and a drive to acquire weapons of mass destruction (WMD), the first priority should be to see that they can never obtain such weaponry.

Seeing as how Iraq's current regime has broken every aspect of the 1991 Kuwait pledge, in which stated it would destroy and stop developing all WMD and long-range missiles, I feel that now is the time for the U.S. to take matters into its own hands and do away with the tyrannical regime of Saddam Hussein.

The United States has been more than patient with Hussein. We have witnessed Saddam's "catand-mouse" games with U.N. weapons inspectors for 12 long years. One minute he allows inspectors in, and the next he kicks them out. Even as the inspectors are approaching particular sites where WMD are suspected, it is widely known that upon their arrival, Iraqi personnel are running out the back door with cart loads of classified documents and who-knows-what-else.

So what do the liberals want to do? They want to keep Saddam's little games going. They deem President Bush a war-monger who is only interested in oil and avenging the assassination attempts on his father that occurred during the first Gulf War. Unfortunately, they are dead wrong.

Liberals fail to see that Iraq is a clear and present danger to their own personal safety. It is sad to say that it would probably take another, even more tragic September 11 to open their eyes. There is no doubt in my mind that as soon as Iraq obtains the means to deliver any type of WMD to the United States, Saddam will not hesitate to use it to his advantage. Keep in mind that this is the very same man who, when feeling threatened, gassed his own people to protect his own interests.

One of our nation's greatest presidents, Ronald Reagan, couldn't have said it better when he stated, "The Democrats may remember their lines, but how quickly they forget the lessons of the past. I have witnessed five major wars in my lifetime, and I know how swiftly storm clouds can gather on a peaceful horizon."

The next time a Saddam Hussein takes over Kuwait, or North Korea brandishes a nuclear weapon, will we be ready to respond? In the end, it all comes down to leadership, and that is what this country is looking for now."

Thankfully, the United States is currently under the leadership of the knowledgeable George W. Bush. He sees the threat that Iraq imposes very clearly. And as he so eloquently put it, "I am not willing to stake one American life on trusting Saddam Hussein." Well neither am I, Mr. President, and neither should any American.

Gulf of Tonkin: A Lesson Learned?

By NICKLAUS MISITI Statesman Staff

As the Ides of March approach and the Bush administrations' plans for war in Iraq seem to be temporarily on hold, the U.S. is forced to regroup and find new avenues to build the wartime coalition they desire. During this "calm before the storm," let's look at how another U.S. administration handled the search for popular opinion in entering an unpopular war.

Between 1962 and 1964, the US was not officially entered into the now infamous Vietnam conflict.

The only card Bush has is the War card. History has shown politics is a dirty game where cheating is second nature.

However, they were supplying a flood of American advisors, aircraft, ships and craft, vehicles, weapons, and supplies to the South Vietnamese. Despite this intervention, the South Vietnamese military was losing the fight. The Johnson administration decided stronger US military countermeasures were necessary and pursued a strategy of "graduated military pressure" against the North Vietnamese.

The Gulf of Tonkin is a body of water that lies on the East Coast of North Vietnam and the West Coast of the island Hainan. This was the staging area of the U.S. Seventh Fleet, and the site where official U.S. involvement in Vietnam would escalate. The Maddox, an American destoyer in the fleet, was attacked once partly in response to armed reconnaissance missions along the coast of N. Vietnam, and partly in retribution for a covert US-led South Vietnamese bombing of two Northern Vietnamese islands.

But aircraft sent to defend the Maddox never confirmed an enemy presence. Furthermore, the recommendation of Captain John J. Herrick, the senior naval officer on board Maddox that the circumstancesincluding darkness, stormy seas and nervous, inexperienced crewmen—warranted a "thorough investigation" into what actually happened. Despite this recommendation, the Johnson administration immediately sent the then defense secretary Robert McNamara to Congress seeking a Declaration of War. McNamara got what he sought as the Tonkin Gulf Resolution passed almost unanimously in the Senate, 88-2.

But McNamara's account, backed by the Johnson administration, did not go unchallenged. Before a joint executive session of the Senate Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committee debating full congressional support for the resolution, Senator Wayne Morse (D-Ore.), who had already dubbed the conflict "McNamara's War," declared, "I am unalterably opposed to this course of action... I think you are kidding the world if you try to give the impression that when the South Vietnamese naval boats bombarded two islands a short distance off the coast of North Vietnam we were not implicated." Morse also noted that the American vessels were "conveniently standing by" as support for an attack on Maddox.

More illumination into the truth of what happened in kin can be found in a 1996 book titled In Retrospect: The Tragedy and Lessons of Vietnam, written by

A THOUGHT FROM RABBI ADAM

A parable: A man was sleeping one night in his cabin when suddenly his room filled with light, and G-d appeared. The Lord told the man he had work for him to do, and showed him a large rock in front of his cabin. The Lord explained that the man was to push against the rock with all his might. So, this the man did, day after day. He toiled from sunup to sundown, his shoulders set squarely against the cold, massive surface of the unmoving rock, pushing with all of his might. Each night the man returned to his cabin sore and worn out, feeling that his whole day had been spent in vain. He began to feel that the task was impossible and that he was a failure. These thoughts discouraged and disheartened the man. He asked himself, "Why kill myself over this? I'll just put in my time, giving just the minimum effort; and that will be good enough." That's what the weary man planned to do, but decided to make it a matter of prayer and to take his troubled thoughts to the Lord. "Lord," he said, "I have labored long and hard in your service, putting all my strength to do that which you have asked. Yet, after all this time, I have not even budged that rock by half a millimeter. What is wrong? Why am I failing? The Lord responded compassionately, "My friend, when I asked you to serve Me and you accepted, I told you that your task was to push against the rock with all of your strength, which you have done. Never once did I mention to you that I expected you to move it. Your task was to push. And now you come to Me with your strength spent, thinking that you have failed. But, is that really so? Look at yourself. Your arms are strong and muscled; your legs have become massive and hard. Through opposition you have grown much, and your abilities now surpass that which you used to have. True, you haven't moved the rock. But your calling was to be obedient and to push and to exercise your faith and trust in My wisdom. That you have done. Now I, my friend, will move the rock." The message: At times, we tend to use our own intellect to decipher what He wants, when actually what G-d wants is just a simple obedience and faith in Him. But we must keep in mind..

Snowfall Aftermath

To make sure that operations ran smoothly, some of the campus dining directors stayed at local hotels on Sunday night so that they could make it in safely on Monday, Ospitale said.

CDS stayed in contact with RHDs, quad directors, and the university to make sure that students were informed. E-mail and phone messages were sent to students.

One e-mail message, sent on Tuesday, said, "Sometime before 5 p.m., the SAC food court will start providing complementary hot beverages." The hot beverages were never served, and students were turned away. The e-mail was reportedly distributed mistakenly.

After the message had been sent out, the CDS Operations Director spoke with the SAC Building Manager, and decided to forego the beverages because the SAC employees were needed at residential dining halls. "The focus was on feeding the students," Ospitale said.

As snow removal continued throughout the week, it remained difficult to get around the campus. Like many students, Roth Quad resident Adam Litroff was disappointed by the university's snow cleanup efforts.

"The university quickly plowed out the faculty and staff parking lots, but it seems like they were slow to help the students out," he said.

Vietnam Revisited

McNamara himself. In the book, he admits, "We of the Kennedy and Johnson administrations who participated in the decisions on Vietnam acted according to what we thought were the principles and traditions of this nation. We made our decisions in light of those values. Yet we were wrong, terribly wrong. We owe it to future generations to explain why."

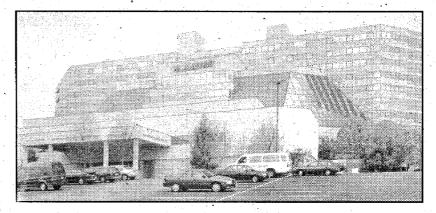

The current Bush administration has built up troops and propaganda in the Gulf to the point that it looks foolish if Bush does an about-face, not to mention that inaction would only elucidate his domestic failures at home. The only card Bush has is the War card. History has shown politics is a dirty game where cheating is second nature. The Gulf of Tonkin is an example of this, an instance in which supposedly benign military provocation leads to a conflict. Sadly, it is a historically proven political tactic to gain popular support in entering an unpopular or questionable war.

War in Iraq is both unpopular and questionable (unless you exclusively watch American news), but the fact is, Bush's reputation and political career are dependent on this invasion. Currently, it is not about liberation as the pro-war side says, or about oil as the anti-war side says. It is about a president's quest for survival; for him to live, others must die.

Women's Basketball Pulls Off Needed Win

By DANA GOMI Statesman Staff

The Stony Brook women's basketball team improved their record to 7-15, 5-6 in the American East when they beat Hartford 66-54 on Wed., Feb 19.

The Seawolves came into the start of the game with only one thing on their minds: winning. The first half was a nonstop battle for the lead. There were six lead changes during the first half, as well as three ties.

Stony Brook stood out this game, shooting 58 percent while their opponents shot a meager 36 percent. This offensive consistency during the first half helped the Seawolves take the lead going into the locker room at halftime, 33-26.

Stony Brook, however, did run into foul trouble in the first half. They picked up a total of 10 fouls by the buzzer, but Hartford came into the second half and encountered some foul difficulties themselves.

In the second half, Danyelle Ingram converted two of her four foul shots, maintaining the lead for Stony Brook. With 15 minutes left in the game, the Seawolves managed to hang onto that lead until the very end.

The Seawolves were obviously pumped this game, and with good reason—Malica Jibowu is now back and playing with the women after a prolonged absence. Coach Trish Roberts has greater freedom again to substitute for tired athletes.

SBU had three other players in double figures. Bogetic scored 12 points in the game on six-of-seven shooting, and secured four rebounds.

Danielle DeGiorgio chipped in with 10 points and five rebounds. Ingram also scored 10 points.

According to the players, this was an important win for the team. They are hoping it will inspire them to do well in the games leading up to the American East Tournament which takes place March 13-15.

Next up, the Seawolves will take on Vermont on Feb 26. Stony Brook will also soon have to face Maine, the number one team in the American East.

"Maine is scary. Every time we go to play Maine they have a huge audience. They scream and yell and you can't hear anything," Bogetic said. "[And] Albany has a huge player. She is 6'4". But we are just going to try and win as many games as we can."

This game was an easy win for a team that has seen its share of struggles since its transition to Division I.

"It was a fun game," Bogetic said. "It was also a pretty easy game."

The next women's home game will be against Maine on March 1 at 2 p.m.

Mike on the Mat: Extreme Stupidity in WWE

By MICHAEL ADLER Statesman Staff

Just when I thought I ran out of things to write about, the WWE has gone ahead and done all sorts of new stupid little things. God bless you guys. Most of the current stupidity centers on ruining careers this week, but we have some Undertaker shenanigans as well.

I'm still flabbergasted at the bit they did last week to reintroduce Kanyon after a very lengthy absence. He was the surprise in the giant wood in box that was part of Big Show's attempt to apologize to the Undertaker. (That feud is a stupidity unto itself, and worthy of its own column) Out comes Kanyon dressed like Boy George and singing one of Boy George's songs. He then attacks Undertaker, but Undertaker gains the upper hand and proceeds to destroy him.

Now that's just messed up. This is worse than Mike Awesome's return after his injuries when he jobbed nonstop on Velocity. Kanyon was coming back from some terrible injuries, and to have him job like that on his first night back is just disgusting. What a reward for all the hard work he did to recover from his injuries! Furthermore, Undertaker is at the end of the road of his career, while Kanyon still has a lot of good years left. To crush him like that is to potentially crush his career.

The Undertaker, on the other hand, is nearing retirement, and there is no sane reason why he should be crushing new talent like that. If he wants to push his weight around, let him beat up Hulk Hogan and Stephanie. It's a travesty.

Speaking of travesties, the WWE recently let D'Lo Brown go. Now this is a brilliant maneuver: in the midst of a story line where D'Lo proclaims the WWE is racist against blacks, they decide to fire him for real. This is beside the point, though. D'Lo Brown was a decent wrestler! He happened to be stuck in some terrible gimmicks over the past year or so, but of all the people stinking up the ring lately, (e.g. Triple H), he certainly did not deserve a firing. But then, when does the WWE ever do anything logically? One wonders if he wasn't truly fired for being black. If Booker T jobs to Triple H in the future, we'll know the true answer.

Was D'Lo Brown fired for being black?

Ah, and the last thing I want to call into question: Nathan Jones' unfinished business with the Undertaker. Who can forget Nathan Jones' unfinished business? They had that great feud back in....oh wait, Nathan Jones is a new wrestler, and he's never wrestled the Undertaker! What idiot came up with this idea? Surely the writers were on drugs when they decided to feed him that line. The real unfinished business is that Nathan Jones and The Undertaker are both really big. Hence, according to Vince's rules of wrestling, it'll be a great series of matches that'll draw a huge audience.

The stupidity never ends in the WWE.

And on a positive note, go out and pick

"Best of Confidential" DVDs. They're loaded with great stuff that's not nearly as stupid as recent events. As always, the more I plug them, the more free stuff I get. Coming soon: Interview with Mick Foley--maybe.
