First come, first served

Soledad O'Brien is an anchor and special correspondent for CNN's Special Investigations Unit, reporting documentaries and in-depth stories for all major CNN programs.

O'Brien joined CNN in July 2003 as co-anchor of the network's flagship morning program, American Morning, and distinguished herself by reporting from the scene of such stories as Hurricane Katrina and the tsunami in Thailand.

O'Brien served as CNN's point person for President George W. Bush's visit to Mexico, delivering a series of reports on conditions that fuel illegal immigration to the United States. She also anchored and reported a Special Investigations Unit documentary about Martin Luther King Jr.'s private writings, notes and teachings. She champions "Children of the Storm," an initiative that provides video cameras to young Hurricane Katrina survivors, enabling them to tell their stories of trial and triumph in their own words and images.
