Newsbriefs

LEGISLATURE PASSES BUDGET

The fiscal 1988 budget, which covers state agencies through March 31, 1988, has been passed by the legislature. It includes increases initiated by the legislature over the governor's request in major areas including personal services, OTPS, and the Graduate Education and Research Initiative, but not enough to restore them to the levels originally requested by SUNY.

Don't expect any major budget changes to take place on campus soon. Administrative sources explained that the allocation process normally takes several weeks at the state Division of the Budget and SUNY Central before reaching the campus budget office, where it is distributed to departments.

OPERATION HURRY

Thanks to an early-rising payroll director and a quick-action staff, the campus payroll was distributed April 1 despite lack of a state budget. Governor Cuomo and legislative leaders agreed to action allocating funds to meet the state payroll only hours before the old fiscal year expired March 31.

But the thousands of checks for employees remained in Albany. Henry Robinson, payroll director here, was on an early flight out of Long Island MacArthur Airport and by 5:45 a.m. was waiting in Albany for the doors to open. He arrived at the Albany airport for the return flight "by the skin of my teeth," and was in his office by 9 o'clock. His waiting staff took over and did in a few hours what normally requires a full working day. Their goal was met: the custodial personnel leaving work at 2:30 p.m. had their biweekly checks in hand.

MANAGING HOSPITAL WASTE

Twice in recent months, municipal officials have temporarily banned waste being sent to town landfills from area health facilities, including University Hospital. Fear of infectious diseases, and conflicting state guidelines, were cited as causes. This led to an April 10 workshop arranged by Robert Francis, vice president for campus operations.

Several proposals for overcoming the growing problems of waste disposal were offered by 50 hospital administrators, solid-waste experts, and environmentalists. A popular idea came from Francis: color code hospital waste bags so landfill workers will know what they are handling. Other suggestions included creating a consortium of hospitals to incinerate the waste, conducting an educational program, and redefining infectious wastes.

Francis said a report will be prepared and follow-up action begun by Stony Brook's new Waste Management Institute.

Grad Students Demonstrate For $2,000 Stipend Raise

BY KEVIN IRELAND

Stony Brook's teaching and graduate assistants held a job action April 7-8 to publicize their demands for larger stipends, better benefits, and the right to unionize. The event disrupted classes and drew more than 1,000 participants and spectators at its peak during a four-hour rally Wednesday.

Chris Vestuto, president of the Graduate Student Organization, which organized the job action, spoke of it as a success. "I would say certainly well over half the G.A.s and T.A.s participated," he said. "We had about 900 graduate student employees who signed a petition in support of our demands." President Marburger said the event provided a focus of interest on campus that was very healthy. He added, "While I cannot condone any failure to meet academic obligations, I feel the graduate students made every effort to avoid disrupting academic actions on campus. This was very responsible and well run."

The week before the job action, members of the GSO had met with Marburger and other senior administrators to present demands for:

- an immediate $2,000 raise, to a total of $8,000, in the minimum annual stipend;
- a health insurance plan comparable to that which faculty and staff have;
- expanded and affordable child care; and
- recognition of graduate students' right to unionize.

The group also demanded that Stony Brook use at least 50 percent of the money it receives from the Graduate Research Initiative to support larger stipends and better benefits for graduate assistants.

Marburger, Provost Jerry Schubel and Robert Lichter, vice provost for research and graduate studies, responded in a letter to Vestuto that they sympathized with the graduate students' plight but pointed out that many of the issues were part of a historical problem caused by insufficient funding. Stony Brook has sought more money for graduate stipends each year for nearly a decade, said the administrators, and the university has reallocated funds to support stipends every year since 1980. But the amount of support from the state has never been enough to increase stipends to the level where they should be.

The problem of day care also can be linked to insufficient funding. Stony Brook has a limited amount of space to devote to day care facilities and many other needs because of a lack of money to build new buildings.

The administrators did offer hope on two issues. They pledged to increase the minimum stipend for the next academic year, and to assign an administrator to help graduate assistants get an adequate health care plan. They said the size of the stipend increase and the percentage of the Graduate Research Initiative that goes to the assistants' needs will depend on the amount of money

President's Awards

By ALVIN F. OICKLE

Eight faculty and staff members have been chosen for the annual President's Awards for excellence in service: three for teaching, two for library services, and three professional staff members.

The eight will be honored at dinner at the home of President and Mrs. Marburger this month, when they will be presented cash awards of $500 and certificates. Campus programs are planned for the faculty and professional staff.

Selected for the President's Awards for Excellence in Teaching were Homer Goldberg and Stacey Olster, English, and Howard Scarrow, Political Science.

President Marburger's congratulatory letter noted that these awards recognize "faculty members who have demonstrated exceptional commitment to and success in undergraduate teaching." The formal presentation of their award certificates will take place at the annual Undergraduate Excellence Awards ceremony April 29.

Chosen for the President's Awards for Excellence in librarianship were Richard Feinberg, reference librarian, and Brigitte Howard, serials librarian.

The 1987 Awards for Excellence in Professional Service will be presented to L. Anne Byrnes of the University Counseling Center, Jo Fusco of the Center for Continuing Education, and Lucia Rusty of the Office of Undergraduate Studies. They will be honored at the seventh annual reception, sponsored by the Professional Employees Governing Board and Marburger, from 4 to 5:30 p.m. Thursday, April 23, in the Fine Arts Center Lobby. Here are excerpts from citations prepared by department heads or President Marburger for each of the eight:

SUCOLIAN, April 22, 1959

Within the next week, the students will be asked to vote on a constitution for the college. I wonder if the students realize how much responsibility is being placed on them. This government, whichever one might be chosen, is not only going to be the government to decide policy for us now, but in the very near future there will be many new students under its jurisdiction. These students, yet to come, will not have the opportunity to choose their government. They must accept the one which we will adopt in the next few days. Therefore, our responsibility is not only to ourselves, but also, indirectly, to the students who are still to enter our college. We are responsible in that we must be sure we are adopting the right government to administer to our growing community. It is our duty, each and every one of us, not only to ourselves but to each other and to future students, to examine these two documents carefully, question each and every part of them, and to vote for the one which we think will best guide the student affairs of this college.

Statesman, April 19, 1967

The administration has decided to name the residential colleges for distinguished deceased New Yorkers who have made eminent contributions to our "intellectual and cultural heritage." Suggestions on possible names which meet these requirements are welcome from all members of the university community.

Statesman, April 18, 1977

Today, the struggle of the people of South Africa against apartheid, white majority rule, and imperialist domination is reaching a critical point ... At Stony Brook, students will be going around to the dorms in order to raise funds for the liberation forces.

Stony Brook gets in the 1987-88 budget. In any case, they said, it was unlikely the minimum stipend would rise as high as $8,000.

The administrators refused to recognize the graduate assistants' right to unionize, saying that Stony Brook and the rest of the SUNY system considers graduate assistants as students, not workers, who assist professors while furthering their education. After the job action, Vestuto characterized the demands as a starting point for negotiations. "What we're looking for is a specific set of counter-proposals. We want to sit down and horse-trade," he said.

He added that GSO members want to be reasonable in negotiating, but they want the administration to prove its case. "We want Stony Brook to open its books to us," he said. "What we're dealing with now is rhetoric. We want them to show us they don't have the money."

Marburger said that Stony Brook has a fairly open budget process now, but he said he would be glad to continue discussions with the students about the budget. He said the GSO and the University Senate should be, and are, a part of the budget-making process, but he added, "While I appreciate the graduate students' input, I don't regard the administration as being in negotiations with graduate assistants."

This could be a sore point. Vestuto said that the graduate assistants consider themselves workers with the right to negotiate. He said they are adamant about gaining the right to unionize. "Stony Brook is not being asked to endorse unions, only to endorse the students' right to choose for themselves. This is an issue of self-determination," he said.

Vestuto could not say whether the graduate assistants would conduct another job action, or whether they would take other steps in protest, but he said, "If dissatisfaction isn't alleviated, something will happen; it has to."

ted professional who gives 110 percent on a daily basis. Her work is of such high quality and caliber that she serves as a role model for her colleagues and all with whom she interacts."

FEINBERG—A Stony Brook employee since 1971, he was cited "as coordinator of the important library instruction program ... [He] has been responsible for the development of several new courses in library research and has participated directly in the teaching of these courses. The evaluations he has received from students have been uniformly outstanding."

FUSCO—At Stony Brook since 1970 and an associate dean, she was recognized this way: "Perhaps no one person in Continuing Education has excelled in more areas of service to CED and the university community at large than [Fusco]."

GOLDBERG—"Testimony from students he taught 30 years ago is no different from the words of last year's graduates; namely, that Professor Goldberg is an outstanding professor of extraordinary commitment, who possesses exceptional mastery of his subject, and exhibits teaching excellence." He joined the Stony Brook faculty in 1961.

HOWARD—"Her librarianship is enhanced by her proficiency in several foreign languages, her self-discipline and attention to detail, and her management and supervisory capabilities. Her diligence contributed to the success of the Long Island Union List of Serials, an enormous research-sharing project." Her Stony Brook affiliation began in 1974.

OLSTER—English chair David Sheehan wrote: "I do not know of any junior colleague with a more clearly documented excellence in teaching ... I would also add that I suspect there are few faculty in any departments who enjoy such respect as a teacher from colleagues in other departments. She joined the faculty in 1981."

RUSTY—At Stony Brook since 1974, she provides "academic counseling to all students, advises stu-

SCARROW—Here since 1962, he "has demonstrated to other members of (Political Science) that it is possible to combine dedicated performance with a productive research career ... [He] has been frequently involved in helping junior faculty improve their teaching styles and material."

New Department Heads

Two appointments have been made in the School of Medicine. George W. Tyson was named to chair the Department of Neurological Surgery for a three-year term ending Jan. 31, 1990, and Patrick A. Sibony to serve as acting chair of the Department of Ophthalmology. Both terms were effective Feb. 1.

Publishing Notes

Daniel M. Fox, professor of humanities in medicine, is the author of Health Policies, Health Politics, The British and American Experience 1911-1965, published by Princeton University Press. The book explores the basis for many of the "vexing problems in health affairs" in the 1980s. A review in the November issue of Science calls the book "one of the clearest and most persuasive interpretations to date of how these problems came into being."

Edward F. Gibbons, Jr., professor of psychology, has been named editor for a series on endangered species. The series will be produced by SUNY Press.

Irish Honor Thomas Flanagan

Thomas Flanagan, professor of English, has received the gold medal from the Eire Society of Boston in recognition of his "outstanding contributions in the fields of history and literature." In past years, the prestigious medal has gone to film directors John Ford and John Huston, President John F. Kennedy, Eugene McCarthy, Thomas (Tip) O'Neill, and Charles Haughey, the prime minister of Ireland. Flanagan is the author of The Year of the French, a historical novel about a battle involving French, rebellious Irish, and English forces. The book won the 1979 National Book Critics Circle Award, in competition with works by Norman Mailer and William Styron. Flanagan is currently finishing a new book, to be called The Tenants of Time.

Music Notes

The Stony Brook Chamber Singers will offer an unusual program of Renaissance and Baroque music written for sopranos, altos, and basses in a concert Thursday, April 24, at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Recital Hall. Featured will be madrigals by Thomas Weelkes, villanelles by Luca Marenzio, a motet by Richard Dering, several psalms by Haydn, and several rarely-heard noctunes for voices and clarinets by Mozart. Choral Director Timothy Mount will conduct. Admission is free.

The Camerata Singers and the Contemporary Music Ensemble will perform Stravinsky's "Mass," and other contemporary works, at 8 p.m. Thursday, Apr. 30, in the Fine Arts Center Recital Hall. "Mass" was originally intended as a liturgical piece and is scored for chorus, soloists, and double wind quintet. Steve Freides will conduct. Also during this program the Contemporary Music Ensemble will perform works by Charles Wuorinen, Stephen Wolpe, and Joel-Francis Durand, with Jun Nakabayashi conducting. (See accompanying review of Durand's work.)

The University Chorus will join the Camerata Singers and Symphony Orchestra for a concert of 20th century music May 12 at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Main Stage Auditorium. Under the direction of Timothy Mount, the groups will perform Faure's "Requiem" and Poulenc's "Gloria." Featured soloists will be Elizabeth Wiggins and Charles Gafford. Also in this program, David Lawton will conduct Dvorak's "Cello Concerto," featuring soloist Brooks Whitehouse, winner of the Master's Concerto Competition.
