Marshall Receives Warm Welcome From Chinese

George Marshall at the Great Wall of China

By FAITH DEVITT

George Marshall, director of environmental health and safety, spent the summer of 1987 in the People's Republic of China as the first foreign guest invited to lecture on occupational safety issues by the Ministry of Labor and Personnel. He was also named a consultant on a risk assessment project for the Chinese Labor Movement College, with an open invitation to visit at any time.

Marshall spent three months, first in Beijing, and then the cities of Xian, Chengdu, and Shanghai. The lectures were given mornings, with afternoons reserved for group discussions. The lecture audiences, both in Beijing and in the provinces, Marshall said, were attentive, intelligent and responsive. The dynamics of interchange were assisted by a translator. Marshall was also accompanied by two representatives from the Ministry of Labor. He found the Chinese were very much aware of Nobel Physics Laureate C.N. Yang and his association with Stony Brook.

China, Marshall feels, is willing to learn from the West, and with hindsight and foresight, may be able to avoid some of the ills of modern technology.

The first legislation which dealt with safety issues was passed in the Sich province in 1987. In October 1983, Marshall had visited the People's Republic of China as part of a group of safety professionals. At that time they toured a petroleum facility and noted its poorly equipped and trained fire department. On this visit he learned that, in January 1984, several firemen were unfortunately killed fighting a fire at that plant.

George's wife, Elizabeth, and son, Christopher, a student at SUNY College at Oneonta, were able to join him for two months. The family stayed for a while at The Guest House, where they found their hosts to be as courteous as George's audiences. The Guest House, a five-story hotel with no elevator, had made gracious accommodations to its Western visitors. Whereas hot water usually was only available from 8-9 p.m., the coal furnace was stoked early in the morning so that there was water available for a morning shower.

Arrangements were made for Marshall to visit in people's homes. He found their ability to cope in crowded and somewhat uncomfortable conditions remarkable. Even families of relatively high status live in small apartments, oftentimes sharing cooking and toilet facilities with extended, or other, families.

Chinese hospitality, said Marshall, made social encounters warm and friendly, so that he felt he was a welcome guest as well as a teacher during his visit.

Computer Training To Begin Jan. 5

Four introductory computer courses designed as short-term personal/business computer training have been developed by the Harriman School for Management and Policy and will be offered by the School for Continuing Education.

The subjects being given are: desktop publishing (PageMaker); presentation graphics (Harvard Graphics); spreadsheets (Lotus 1-2-3); and word processing (WordStar).

The courses are all six sessions and are from 5:30-7:30 p.m. various weeks in January, February, and March. The first course is the word processing one, which starts Jan. 5. The cost of each course is $195 ($175.50 for Stony Brook employees).

For further information, call 632-7173. For registration, call 632-7068.

Seniors Briefed on Arms Control Before U.S.-Russian Summit

Four Stony Brook seniors had an opportunity to meet with U.S. officials participating in the INF negotiation in Washington, D.C. on Dec. 1 and 2 just prior to the Summit meeting.

Joseph Barics, Deborah Bow, Anthony Catanzaro, and Hilary Garskof studying arms control issues in EST 360 "Science, Technology, and Arms Control" sponsored by the Department of Technology and Society visited the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency to be briefed on the INF Treaty. They met with officials participating in the final review of the draft treaty that ended with the dispatch of the final version on the 6 p.m. plane to Geneva.

On the following day, students traveled to CIA offices for a briefing on intelligence processes and arms control agreements. They also met with staff members at the Arms Control Association, a non-governmental policy research organization. They were briefed on internship possibilities and current policy issues being studied by the association.

The trip is made once each year by students participating in the arms control courses sponsored by the Department of Technology and Society, of the College of Engineering and Applied Sciences.

Local Schools Offer Graduate Students Substitute Science and Math Jobs

The Center for Science, Mathematics, and Technology Education held its first orientation workshop for graduate students from science, mathematics, and engineering departments interested in serving as occasional substitute teachers in secondary schools. Sixteen graduate students and a post-doctoral fellow participated.

The workshop was led by Scott McMullen, a lecturer in the Center for Science, Mathematics, and Technology Education. He introduced graduate students to lesson planning, effective teaching techniques, and the procedures expected of a substitute science or mathematics teacher. Lunch was provided by the Office of the Provost.

Long Island is currently experiencing a severe lack of qualified substitute teachers in science and mathematics. Stony Brook students can respond to this regional need and learn more about effective teaching techniques in the process.

The participating students who participated unanimously described the program as successful. Many others who were unable to take part in the first program on short notice have asked that it be repeated. Graduate students seeking additional information or to learn about plans for the next workshop should call the Center for Science, Mathematics, and Technology Education at 632-7075.

New Computer Art Lab

The spring semester will see the initiation of a computer art lab shared by the Department of Art, College of Engineering and Applied Sciences, and the School of Continuing Education. Its first use will be limited to five graduate/upper division major enrollments from each of those sources.

The lab will have the latest generation hardware and software, including 3-D projection and jet color printer.

Annual Fund Tops $150,000

The State University of New York at Stony Brook received $157,367 in contributions to the Annual Fund in 1986-87. The Fund's fiscal year is from July 1 to June 30. Now in its fourth year, the Annual Fund receives support from alumni, faculty/staff, parents, and corporate and community friends. Also included in the fund total are corporate matching gifts. Eighteen hundred seventy contributors are listed in this year's roster of donors. We thank all our contributors for their loyalty and support.

Who gives to the Annual Fund?

Alumni contributed $66,103, faculty and staff, $13,971, parents, $3,928, corporate and community friends, $65,320, and matched giving companies, $8,165. The class with the largest number of donors was '81, followed by '74 and '80. The class with the greatest percentage of donors was '63. Tied for the largest number of donors over $50 were '71 and '78. The class that contributed the most money ($4,559) was '82. Teachers, business managers, engineers, and lawyers are our most frequent contributors, and donors come from 36 different states.

How does Stony Brook compare with other SUNY schools?

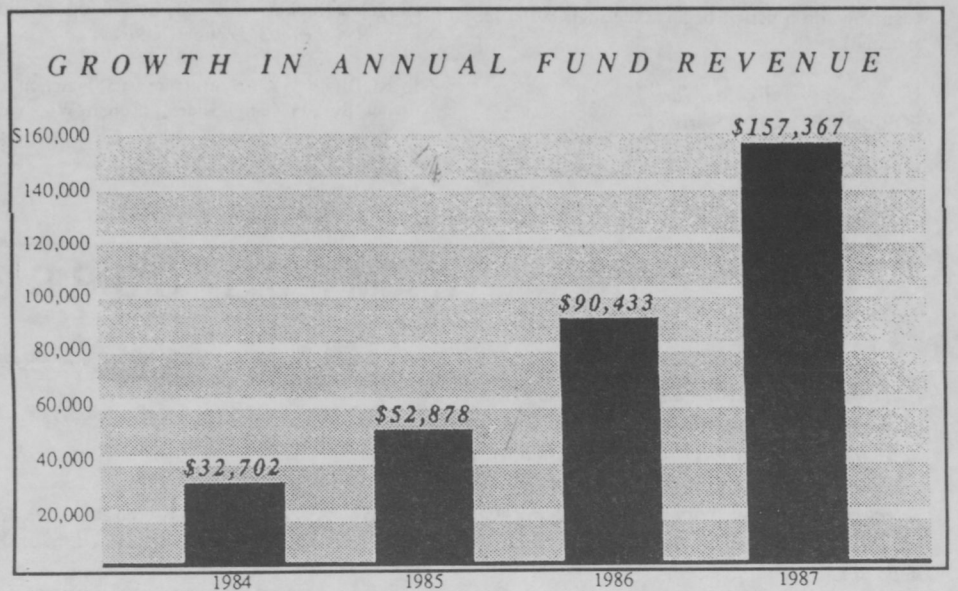

Stony Brook is ranked fifth by alumni on record and 20th of 50 SUNY campuses in alumni gifts. It is 12th by number of alumni donors. Keeping in mind that Stony Brook's Annual Fund is only four years old, we are doing quite well in comparison with other schools that have had an annual giving program for many more years. But since we believe Stony Brook is the best campus in the system, our hope is that we will one day be number one in showing alumni loyalty and support.

Anyone interested in seeing the full roster of alumni and parent contributors will be able to obtain the Annual Giving issue of Stony Brook magazine by calling Marlene Williams, director of annual giving, at 632-6336.

We thank the following faculty and staff contributors to the 1986/87 Annual Fund Campaign. Although the list has been compiled with care, errors may appear. If your name has been listed incorrectly or omitted, please accept our apologies and bring the mistake to the attention of the Annual Giving Office. This list contains only the names of those donors who contributed between July 1, 1986 and June 30, 1987.
