

University's Future Bright

Provost Sees Growth Ahead

BY SUE RISOLI

Provost Jerry R. Schubel delivered a message of pragmatic optimism—tempered with warnings about Stony Brook's future—to an audience of several hundred faculty, staff and students at a university convocation February 3 in the Fine Arts Center Recital Hall.

The convocation, "Stony Brook: Obstacles and Opportunities", was the fourth in a series established this academic year by the Office of the Provost. Schubel was introduced by Stony Brook President John H. Marburger, who noted that the provost saw "no contradiction between abstract scholarship and public service, between teaching and research, between pure and applied science." Quoting an "old Chinese proverb" that cautions, "If we don't change direction, we're apt to end up where we're headed," Schubel advised an immediate change of direction for Stony Brook. "Stony Brook is a genuine success story in the history of higher education, but I think now that the 'sea state' has changed, and we find ourselves in a transitional stage. I'm convinced that what the university does over the next several years will determine how successful we will be in the continued development of Stony Brook as a major research university," said Schubel.

The first step in doing so, he continued, is identifying the "obstacles and opportunities" along the way. Quality of undergraduates and "size of our total academic enterprise" are two key obstacles, Schubel pointed out. "Our best undergraduates are as good as those at any institution, but they form too small a part of our student body," he said.

Location is "both an obstacle and an opportunity", the provost said, citing the shortage of affordable housing for both students and junior faculty, a "mismatch" between students' needs and programs offered, a deteriorating physical plant, a lack of "campus culture", "enormous" cost of living on Long Island, and the "parochial nature of the undergraduate student body."

"Eighty-six percent of our undergraduate students come from Long Island and the metropolitan New York City area. An additional 8.6% come from the rest of New York State. We have more foreign undergraduates than students from all of the lems should become opportunities for research and service. Our opportunities are complicated enough to demand the attention of the very best minds." Stony Brook is aided in these efforts, he added, by Long Island's "robust" economy, and the university's proximity to high-technology industry. And we are also, he pointed out, the region's only major other states combined." Changing the mix, he asserted, "would cause a dramatic change in cultural dynamics." Schubel also noted that 88% of graduate students are supported wholly or part by stipends.

Moving to the other side of the coin figuratively—and the other side of the stage literally—Schubel also reminded the audience of Stony Brook's opportunities. "Long Island is a superb natural laboratory and not just for the marine sciences," he said. Citing regional issues such as waste disposal and transportation, he said, "I can't think of any other region in the country that sustains a larger and more complex set of environmental and societal problems than Long Island. For universities, problems should become opportunities for research and service.

In order to take advantage of the opportunities, Schubel warned, Stony Brook would have to change the quality of the "whole undergraduate experience"—paying more attention to student retention and condition of residence halls, increasing numbers of part-time students, enhancing social and intellectual life on campus, establishing an "honors college," expanding the URECA (Undergraduate Research and Creative Activities) program to allow students and faculty to work together on research projects, and development of campus athletics. The region could further be served, he added, by continuing to expand graduate programs offered by the School of Continuing Education.

For faculty, Schubel anticipated the scheduled opening of the university club on February 23, and a cafe to be opened before and after events at the Fine Arts Center. "Next September we will open a Faculty Instruction Support Office," he said, to help faculty who want to improve their teaching, and to explore interdisciplinary teaching. "Distinction through distinctiveness" was his advice for the enhancement of graduate programs on campus, to be achieved partly through the Graduate Research Initiative.

Working with regional legislative leaders is essential, he said. "For every dollar the university spends locally—in Nassau and Suffolk counties—it generates about $2.60 in gross regional income. In 1986 this university spent directly about a third of a billion dollars. More than 90% of that was spent locally. That's pretty impressive." If Stony Brook were not a major research university, "Long Island would not be able to sustain a knowledge-based economy," Schubel said.

The campus should invest its resources in institutes, he said. "One of the most exciting opportunities is the possible development of an institute of mathematical sciences," he said. There is a "very real possibility that one of the most distinguished mathematicians in the world, Dr. John Milnor, will be coming to Stony Brook in January 1989. We hope he will stay and become the director of the new Institute of Mathematical Sciences." These mathematical resources, in combination with Stony Brook's existing Institute for Theoretical Physics, would be of "world-wide significance."

Schubel concluded by exhorting the audience to move forward in converting obstacles to opportunities. Quoting Goethe, he observed, "Boldness has genius, power and magic in it." Schubel added, "There's an awful lot of magic in Stony Brook."

Blackout Cure Carries High Price Tag

BY WENDY GREENFIELD

Repairs are expected to get under way this summer on an electrical feeder, which in shorting out, caused more than half the university to lose power January 29. The problem could cost several hundred thousand dollars to correct.

Ken Fehling, director of the Physical Plant, said the short occurred where the cables are spliced together. About a mile of cable will have to be replaced. SUNY representatives were to meet with officials in Albany this week to work out the details of funding the repairs. Fehling estimated the project will cost "hundreds of thousands of dollars."

All buildings but the Infirmary, the Gymnasium, the Fine Arts Center, the Student Union, G and H Quad and parts of University Hospital and the Health Sciences Center were affected by the blackout that occurred shortly before midnight and lasted until 5 a.m., when power was restored by switching onto back-up feeders. G and H Quads were unaffected by the outage, university officials said.

"There was a fault on one of the 11 feeders in the substation—feeder No. 2—which tripped out the system," said T.M. Aydinalp, assistant vice president for Physical Facilities. A feeder is composed of three wires, each 1.5-inches thick, that provides 13,800 volts of power to the university.

Aydinalp said a team of six electricians first had to identify which feeder was shorted out. They then went from building to building, turning off power completely or reducing the electrical load to prevent damage to equipment from a surge once power was restored. They also had to switch each building to back-up feeder lines.

Ebony Editor To Speak February 16

Lerone Bennett Jr., executive editor of Ebony magazine, historian, poet and author, will speak on "Black History and the American Dream" February 16 at Stony Brook.

The 8 p.m. lecture is free and open to the public, and will be held in the Fine Arts Center Recital Hall. The talk is the third in the Spring 1988 University Distinguished Lecture Series, co-sponsored by Newsday and Stony Brook's Office of the Provost.

Born in Clarksdale, Mississippi, Bennett has been an editor at Ebony since 1952, becoming executive editor in September. Before joining Ebony, he was associate editor of JET magazine, and city editor of the Atlanta Daily World from 1952 to 1953, after working there as a reporter from 1949 to 1952.

A resident of Chicago, Illinois, Bennett has written several books and articles, including "Wade in the Water," "Shaping of Black America" and "Challenge of Blackness." Bennett has lectured at colleges and universities nationwide, and his books and short stories have been translated into French, German, Japanese, Swedish, Russian and Arabic.

The Spring 1988 Distinguished Lecture Series began January 20 with Robert Reno, economics editor of Newsday, followed by Donald Woods, subject of the film "Cry Freedom" and outspoken critic of apartheid. Additional speakers this spring include, I.F. Stone, founder and editor of I.F. Stone's Weekly, March 10; Frances Moore Lappe, author of "Diet for a Small Planet," March 31; Ramsey Clark, former attorney general of the United States, April 25; and Bishop Desmond Tutu, Anglican Bishop of South Africa, May 11.

The series was launched in 1982 as a cooperative effort with Newsday to give students, faculty and the surrounding community the opportunity to hear and see prominent scholars, artists and public officials.

Dr. John Partin has been reappointed chairman of the Department of Pediatrics in the School of Medicine for a three-year term.

Partin joined the medical faculty as professor and chairman of the Pediatrics Department in 1980.

A chief investigator in numerous scientific research projects sponsored by national organizations, he has published and presented scientific papers at many national and international conferences. His research activities include studies in the causes of Reye's syndrome.

Partin received a medical degree from the University of Cincinnati College of Medicine in 1959.

He is a member of numerous professional and scientific organizations, including the American Board of Pediatrics, Society for Pediatric Research and the Electron Microscope Society of America. He has served on the scientific advisory committee of the National Reye's Syndrome Foundation since 1974 and is medical director of the foundation. He has also served as president of the Children's Medical Research Foundation in Stony Brook since 1983.

Dr. David Reynolds Sheehan has been reappointed chairman of the English department for a two-year term. Sheehan has been teaching at Stony Brook since 1974 and was appointed chairman in 1985.

He received a doctorate degree from the University of Wisconsin, Madison, in 1974. He has lectured and published numerous papers on the life and works of Jonathan Swift, the 18th-century English satirist.

Hispanic Language Profs Win Honors

Two professors in the Department of Hispanic Languages and Literature have recently won major honors.

Dr. Hilda Pato has been selected by the New York State/United University Professions Affirmative Action Committee as one of the first recipients of the Dr. Nuala McGann Drescher Affirmative Action Leave Program. The program is a joint initiative between the state and UUP to help recruit and retain minority faculty members and professionals.

While on leave during the 1987-88 academic year in Philadelphia, Professor Pato will publish and prepare for publication her previous research on early 20th-century Spanish lyrical poetry, particularly that of Luis Cernuda. Her doctoral dissertation on this topic is being prepared as a book, which has already been contracted for publication.

Professor Pato received a master's and doctorate degree in Spanish from the University of Pennsylvania. She also holds a master's degree in social welfare from Bryn Mawr College and a bachelor's degree in anthropology from the University of California at Berkeley. She has been teaching at Stony Brook since 1984.

Dr. Maria Luisa Nunes is on a yearlong fellowship at Stanford University's Stanford Institute for Behavioral Sciences. While there, she will lecture on Brazilian literature and culture and will continue her research on the literature of women in the Third World. Professor Nunes received a doctorate degree from City University of New York in 1972 and a master's degree from Columbia University in 1965. She holds a bachelor's degree from Radcliffe College.

She has been associate professor at Stony Brook since 1984.

Repairs Ahead On Feeder

"It was not your typical turn on, turn off a switch situation," Aydinalp noted in praising the efforts of the electrical team who worked through the night to restore power to the campus. They are Tony Valderrama, Ken Danielsen, Frank Burger, Walter Wilson Sr., Walter Wilson Jr. and Alvin Rowland.

Fehling said the last power outage of this magnitude was on June 25, 1981, when the entire campus lost power during a storm.

No patients at University Hospital were affected in the January 29 blackout because within seven seconds of a power failure, the hospital system switches to an emergency generator, a procedure required by the state Health Code, said Chris Brennan, director of the East Campus Physical Plant. The hospital has four emergency generators, but only three are used at any given time, the fourth reserved as a back-up, Brennan explained. Many areas in the hospital have uninterrupted service even with a power failure, however, such as the operating room.

The emergency generators primarily feed the hospital, Brennan said, but they also provide power to the Health Sciences Center. However, after power was restored, certain areas at HSC still had minimal or no power. They included street lights, exit signs, corridors and the elevator.

The Commissary Building, which includes Central Stores and Mail Services, was one of the last facilities to have its power restored since it has no back-up feeder, Aydinalp said.

Meanwhile at some of the dorms, resident directors described the outage as "uneventful."

"Generally, students took it well," said Sheila Curtin, Roth Quad director, adding that a few alarms were pulled and that one theft was reported to the Department of Public Safety.

Asked whether this type of failure could happen again, Aydinalp said such an outage is infrequent, but it does occur.

"We deal with high voltage, very large, hot cables," he said. "Power lines, just like anything else, wear out. The heat wears away at the protective sheathing."

SPECIAL SALUTE: During his convocation address, Provost Schubel lauded a number of programs planned and under way. But before he did so, Schubel, along with former vice president for academic affairs Sidney Gelber, took time to praise someone whose contributions to the university Schubel called "pervasive and important." Faculty heartily applauded the tribute to assistant to the provost Edna K. Owens, who was honored with a plaque and a bouquet of flowers for her twenty years of service to the university. She is scheduled to retire at the end of this academic year.
