Stony Brook's AIDS Education Center Largest On Long Island

By Wendy Greenfield

With a $600,000 federal grant, the AIDS Education and Resource Center in the School of Allied Health Professions has trained more than 8,000 Long Island health care professionals, making it the largest program of its kind on the Island.

Members of the center conduct educational programs for nurses, physicians, social workers and home care workers, as well as teachers and students in the local public school districts. They also conduct training programs at several Long Island health care facilities for staff members who coordinate AIDS education programs in their own settings. The AIDS Education and Resource Center and the AIDS Center in University Hospital recently held a day-long conference on AIDS and the health care professional. About 200 health care professionals turned out for the event's lectures and workshops.

"We get calls all the time," said Rose Walton, Ed.D., center director and chairperson of the Department of Allied Health Resources. "But now the demand is so great. Every hospital department needs some education and there are so few AIDS educators."

Dr. Walton noted that many health care workers feel unprepared to deal with the psycho-social issues of AIDS.

"Health care workers know how to care for the medical needs of AIDS patients, but do not feel up to meeting their psychological needs," she said. "AIDS is not an illness where you can give someone medicine and they'll be cured. Health care workers are faced with a daily emotional strain of seeing young people die. That's a major stress. They need support and education."

AIDS has placed a major burden on health care workers on Long Island, which is ranked 16th in the nation for the highest number of cases, she noted. It is the only suburb in the country that is on the Center for Disease Control's AIDS Weekly Surveillance Report. Of the 76,000 cases diagnosed since 1981 nationwide, 850 are on Long Island. Long Island also exceeds the national average in percentage of intravenous drug users and women with AIDS. Thirty-five percent of the Long Island AIDS cases are IV drug users, compared to 17 percent nationwide; 15 percent of the Long Island cases are women, compared to 9 percent nationally.

Master Planners Meet With Campus Groups To Discuss Future Expansion Of The University

By Sue Risoli

Representatives of Perkins and Will, the architecture/engineering firm retained by the university to prepare a new "master plan," have been meeting with on- and off-campus groups to solicit input and suggestions.

The master plan is a study that will make recommendations for the physical operation and expansion of the 1,100-acre campus. Scheduled to be completed next year, the plan will contain guidelines for such areas as renovation of existing facilities, future expansion, energy conservation, campus safety and accessibility of buildings, campus roads, parking and landscaping. The last master plan was completed in 1976.

Groups of faculty, staff, students and community members have been meeting with Perkins and Will formally and informally, said Deputy to the President Carl Hanes. "We want to give people the chance to identify what they think the problems are. We're asking them to share their thoughts on what's needed to make the campus function better," said Mr. Hanes.

Among the faculty who are serving as advisors during preparation of the master plan are Norman Goodman, sociology, chairman of the University Senate's long-range planning committee; Alan Tucker, applied mathematics and statistics, chairman of the Senate's resource allocation and budget committee; and Thomas Neumiller, theatre, chairman of the Senate's campus environment committee.

The Stony Brook Council, the university's local governing board, has established a citizens advisory council on campus master planning. The purpose of the group—made up of 16 local civic and community organizations—is to help ensure that actions recommended by the master plan enhance the quality of life in the Three Villages. The organizations serving on the citizens advisory council are the Civic Association of the Setaukets, Three Village Civic Association, Stony Brook Civic Association, Long Hill Civic Association, Three Village Pine Barrens

Association, Route 25A Advisory Committee, Route 347 Advisory Committee, Three Village School District, Stony Brook Fire Department, Suffolk County Police Department, Long Island Railroad, St. Georges Country Club, Flowerfield, Village of Old Field, Association for Community/University Cooperation, and Department of Environmental Conservation.

Once the initial data-gathering phase of the project is completed, said Hanes, Perkins and Will will submit draft portions of the master plan to the various groups it has met with, for their review and comment. "There will be continued opportunities for feedback," Mr. Hanes said. "It's an evolving process."

"Once the final draft is completed," he added, "it will serve as a template for rehab and construction changes for the rest of this century and into the next."

Stony Brook Student Becomes First American To Win Abbado Violin Competition

by Vicky Katz

A 21-year-old Stony Brook student has become the first American to win a prize in the eighth annual Michelangelo Abbado Violin Competition held recently in Sondrio, Italy.

The student, Darel Stark, took third prize in the competition which drew competitors from six European and Eastern Bloc nations in addition to the United States. First prize was awarded to a Russian violinist.

"I was thrilled to win," said the young performer who was presented with a small cash prize as well as a plaque and a scroll acknowledging his accomplishment. "It made the long trip and expense worth while." Unlike many of the other competitors whose travel, entry and instruction is underwritten by their governments, Mr. Stark had to pay his own way to the international competition.

Honors are no stranger to this student who in 1987 was one of four winners in the

Recycling Success Has Managers Seeking Expansion

Stony Brook's recycling program has kicked into full gear and is now recycling many tons of paper.

The amount of paper recycled has skyrocketed from 14 tons in August to 37 tons last month because of a stepped-up campaign that took effect in September, said Ken Fehling, campus waste management and recycling coordinator.

"We expected some increase, but not this much," he said.

Fehling attributed the success to university employees, and in particular, the custodial staff members, who have been picking up the paper on Wednesdays. Another person who has been integral to the program is Frank Garske, who singlehandedly collects the paper in 600-lb. bins, loads it onto a truck and then sorts it according to what can be recycled.

Garske said he works from 6 a.m. to 7 p.m., sometimes 8 p.m., collecting a total of eight tons of paper a week from all academic buildings, including the Health Sciences Center. He said much of the time is spent loading paper onto the truck and then unloading it to be sorted at the warehouse. There, he sorts the paper into newspapers, magazines, hard-cover and soft-cover books and other paper called file stock.

The next phase of recycling will take place in the residence halls, Fehling said. A pilot project is expected to begin this month in Benedict Hall, where cardboard is currently being picked up from the cafeteria. By next year, Fehling hopes all the residence halls will have recycling programs in place.

Another plan includes extending the recycling project to the community. Fehling said preliminary discussions have begun with the Three Village School District to handle their paper recycling.

In a separate recycling effort, university grounds crew are clearing dead trees from the woods surrounding the campus. University employees interested in collecting

Professors Prepare High Schoolers For Competitions

By Vicky Penner Katz

With the help of professors at Stony Brook, 37 Nassau and Suffolk high schools are giving their best and brightest a competitive edge in preparing for science and mathematics competitions such as the Westinghouse Talent Search.

The schools are participating in a three-phase pilot program at the university that exposes high school students to experts from the university who are well-versed in developing research topics and procedures. The teens get pointers in choosing an area of study, creating an effective research design, handling data, using scientific literature and in regulations bearing on research with living organisms.

"The response has been extraordinary," says Dr. Lester Paldy, Director of the Center for Science, Mathematics and Technology Education which with the university's new Center for Excellence and Innovation in Education, introduced the "Student Research Support Program" in October. About 500 high school students will have participated when the last of three afternoon briefings is presented on December 1.

Districts that signed up for the program were permitted to send up to five high school freshmen, sophomores and juniors to each of the late afternoon sessions. The first program, held October 20, was geared to students interested in pursuing projects in the biological and biomedical sciences. The second, November 3, concentrated on chemistry, earth sciences, astronomy and physics. The final session, December 1, will explore research projects and procedures in mathematics.

"Though the afternoon presentations will be over on December 1, the Student Research Support Program will not end here," Dr. Paldy stressed. "We expect to make our library facilities available to the students and arrange laboratory tours with their teachers so that they can get a first-hand look at the way research is conducted. We will also be asking the students to provide us with an abstract of their research projects. The projects will be reviewed by a committee in anticipation of our inviting some 20 or 30 of the teens to make a presentation here this spring."

Dr. Paldy also hopes to distribute a newsletter to participating high school teachers to keep them apprised of the research that's under way and to provide an "idea bank" of possible research topics that they can share with their students.

Suffolk high schools participating in the program are: Amityville, Bayport-Blue Point, Commack, Comsewogue, Center Moriches, East Hampton, Half Hollow Hills, Harborfields, Islip, Kings Park, Miller Place, Patchogue-Medford, Port Jefferson, Sagem, Sag Harbor, Shoreham, Sayville, Smithtown East, Southold, Ward Melville, West Islip and William Floyd.

Nassau high schools enrolled in the program are: Baldwin, East Williston, Garden City, Hewlett, Jericho, Lawrence, Long Beach, Lynbrook, Manhasset, Massapequa, North Shore, Port Washington, Rockville Centre, Syosset and Valley Stream.

health care workers face is their attitudes toward homosexuality and IV drug use. Some health care workers find gay men and IV drug users "guilty" of having AIDS, while they feel sorry for a woman who gave AIDS to her baby, he pointed out.

"We try to confront those issues," Dr. Rukeyser said. "Health care workers are better able to give high quality care through examination of their own judgmental attitudes."

Dr. Walton said the center's educational programs are successful because they involve role playing, small group discussions and case presentations, instead of lectures.

"We emphasize the learner's involvement," she explained. "That makes the person responsible for his or her attitudes and behavior and the changes he or she makes."

She also said the center tries to "put a face on the syndrome," by involving people with AIDS and their families.

The center's six-member team will hold six training seminars beginning December on a variety of AIDS-related topics including issues affecting minorities, women, dentistry, family practice, a hospital's AIDS unit staff and drug users.

Those invited to the seminars are physicians at county clinics, dentists and dental hygienists, social workers, nurses, home care workers, family medicine practitioners and physician's assistants and IV drug counselors. This past year, the center held seven seminars.

Under the three-year, $600,000 grant from the National Institute of Mental Health that ends November 1989, Dr. Walton had proposed training 500 health care workers a year. But the center has far exceeded that goal. Last year, it trained more than 5,000 health care workers.

"I think we'll reach more people than that this year," she said.

The university increased its recycling effort in September to reduce its $600,000 a year garbage bill, Fehling said. With paper recycling, the university expects to trim $100,000 off its refuse bill each year.

Fehling also noted that effective July 1, 1989, the state is requiring every state agency and institution to implement a recycling program. He pointed out that an estimated 90 percent of waste generated by an office is paper.

great love and dedication. His future is brilliant."

Mr. Stark has been guest soloist with numerous orchestras including the Kammerguild Chamber Orchestra in St. Louis, the Long Island Musicians Society, the Stony Brook University Orchestra, the Bloomingdale Orchestra and the International Orchestra of New York. He was featured on the McGraw-Hill Young Artist Showcase on radio station WQXR in New York City.

As part of his recent honor, he performed on Italian television and a prior performance in England was shown on television throughout Europe.

This graph shows the increase in recycling over the past year.

Administration Notes

Further Cuts Expected

Further cuts in state spending for fiscal year 1988-89 are expected to be announced soon by the governor's office, President John H. Marburger told the University Senate Monday.

It is not known what effect the new round of expected cuts will have on SUNY, said Dr. Marburger, who noted that Stony Brook already is full swing into a major effort to reduce costs through energy conservation, waste recycling and other measures.

A story in last week's New York Times reported that state officials are projecting a revenue shortfall of $1.7 billion in 1988-89, nearly twice the $900 million shortfall projected last June. The story merely publicized estimates that have been circling Albany for the last several months.

Although cost-saving initiatives are helping to ease the impact of the total $3.5 million permanent base budget reduction Stony Brook has already suffered in 1988-89, they are not nearly enough to cover the total amount permanently, said Dr. Marburger.

The university's budgetary problems are "chronic and significant," said Dr. Marburger, but he called incorrect recent reports that University Hospital has initiated layoffs as a result.

"The hospital has been asked by SUNY to absorb inflation and collective bargaining increases for the current year and next year, said William Newell, executive director. "This has tightened our budget considerably. Accordingly, every vacant position is being reviewed with an eye toward the best use of resources."

Hospital revenues have been negatively affected by the new "DRG" reimbursement system, Mr. Newell added.

New Office To Streamline Research Services

The Office of Research Administration and the Grants Management Office have been consolidated into a single unit reporting to Vice Provost for Research and Graduate Studies Robert L. Lichter.

Creation of the new Office of Research Services will "streamline and improve services to the research community," said President John H. Marburger. "There will now be a single cohesive point of contact for project directors, eliminating duplication of files, records and publications. This will lead, in turn, to a more rapid interpretation and response on policies and policy issues."

The merger provides an opportunity to "explore in depth the complex balance between the needs of the research enterprise and prudent administration and management," noted Dr. Lichter. "The responsibilities of the merged office continue to be research and scholarly effort in the broadest sense, far transcending the sponsored projects that are an important part—but only a part—of the office's overall role."

Stony Brook

Festive Winter Season Planned At The Staller Center

Stony Brook gets into the holiday spirit this month with the first in a series of events that opens a winter season filled with song, dance and theatrical performances.

Here's what's ahead:

- November 30: Jawole Willa Jo Zollar's "Urban Bush Women" will intertwine African, American and Caribbean dance and folklore in this special "Star Attractions" presentation on the Main Stage at the Staller Center for the Arts, 8 p.m. Tickets are $14, $16 and $18.

- December 3: Internationally acclaimed West German violinist Anne-Sophie Mutter plays works by Tartini, Brahms, Franck and Ravel as she starts her 1988 American tour with a performance on the Main Stage at the Staller Center for the Arts, 8 p.m. Tickets are $14, $16 and $18.

- December 6 to December 8: The Crafts Center hosts a "Holiday Fest '88" show and sale of works by professional artists and craftspeople from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the lounge and lobby of the Stony Brook Student Union. Live music will also be provided from noon to 2 p.m. Free admission.

- December 7: The University Wind Ensemble is joined by mezzo-soprano Florence Hechtel in performing works by Mozart and Rossini. Afterwards there will be a Christmas Sing-Along, 8 p.m., Main Stage, Staller Center for the Arts. Tickets are $5, senior citizens and students, $3.

- December 10: The Camarata Singers joins with the Chorale and the Symphony Orchestra for a performance of "L'Enfance du Christ" by Berlioz, 8 p.m., Main Stage, Staller Center for the Arts. Tickets are $5, students and senior citizens, $3.

- December 11: The Symphony Orchestra holds its annual "Messiah" Sing-In, 3 p.m., Recital Hall, Staller Center for the Arts. Admission is free but bring your own score.

- December 15: The Contemporary Chamber Players, graduate students under the direction of Gilbert Kalish and Ray Des Roches, perform the work of professor Bulent Arel. Professor Arel is in the vanguard of composers working in electronic media, writing for a variety of instrumental ensembles and electronically synthesized sound. The concert begins at 8 p.m. in the Recital Hall, Staller Center for the Arts. Tickets are $5, senior citizens and students, $3.

- December 16 and 17: The acclaimed Canadian acrobatic, acting and clown troupe, Dynamo Theatre (formerly La Troupe Circus), offers a special treat at the Staller Center for the Arts with a performance of "Mur-Mur" (mur is the French word for wall) which tells the story of a huge wall and the people who live nearby. There will be a one-hour matinee at 2 p.m. on December 17 geared to youngsters six and up in which the actors will remain in young people's roles, not growing up as they do in the longer evening shows; evening performances at 8 p.m. are suitable for teenagers and adults. Matinee admission is $5 for children, $10 for adults. Tickets for evening performances are $7 for children and $14 for adults.

For ticket information, call 2-7230.

University, Three Village School District Join In Hunger Banquet

Stony Brook students, faculty and staff will team with counterparts from the Three Village School District's Ward Melville High School for a Thanksgiving "Hunger Banquet."

The Nov. 17 event, to be held in the high school cafeteria/auditorium, is designed to raise awareness and concern for the world's hungry. About 400 are expected to join in the 7 p.m. banquet which will randomly assign participants first, second and third world meals according to existing percentages.

"What it means is that about 10 percent of the participants will get a full Thanksgiving dinner consisting of turkey and all the trimmings," explained William Powers, a student at Ward Melville who is coordinating the event in conjunction with Dr. Steve Payson a lay Catholic chaplain at Stony Brook and advisor to the university's Hunger Task Force, a student group.

"About 30 percent of those who attend will get a meal of beans and pita bread, typical of the second world. Sixty percent of those who participate in the "Hunger Banquet" will get what roughly 60 percent of the residents on this planet eat, a third world dinner of boiled rice and water." Afterwards, the participants will get a chance to discuss their reactions. Prior to the banquet, Bill Ayers, founder of World Hunger Year, will speak. Admission to the event is a can of food which will be distributed to Long Island's needy.

"We're hoping that Stony Brook's faculty and staff will join with our students in participating in the Thanksgiving Hunger Banquet, particularly those who live in the Three Village area who have children in the local schools," said Dr. Payson. For more information about the banquet, call 751-6608.

CED Offers Passports To Learning

It won't get you into some exotic country or through U.S. Customs, but the "Passport" to be issued this coming week by the School of Continuing Education could open the door to new worlds.

"We wanted to do something a bit different this year to mark Adult Education Week, Nov. 14 through 20," explained School of Continuing Education dean, Dr. Paul J. Edelson, "hence the idea for the passports."

Anyone who wants to sample a selection of the graduate courses we're offering this fall will be issued one which they can take with them to class during Adult Education Week. Afterwards, the instructor will stamp the booklet, just like a visa."

The comparison is intentional, he adds, since the courses provided by the School of Continuing Education can offer students entry into new and exciting worlds: "It really reflects the scope of our offerings."

Those interested in obtaining a "passport" can call the School of Continuing Education at 2-7050 or stop in at its offices in the Social and Behavioral Sciences Building, Room N -201. A schedule of sample classes for both day and evening will be provided with the document.

Bulletin Board

Notices

Academic and administrative notices should be directed to Assistant Director Sue Risoli, 319 Administration Building.

1988 Service Awards: Plans are being made for the 1988 Service Awards Ceremony to honor those individuals who have been with SUNY at Stony Brook for 30, 25 and 20 years. To confirm that you are included, please contact Larry Mills, Human Resources, 2-6155.

Have you pledged yet? That's the question area captains will be asking this week, the last five days of the annual United Way-State Employees Federated Appeal (SEFA) campaign which ends November 18.

Pledge cards were distributed to employees in October, with most contributions expected to be made through payroll deductions. All university employees who donate to United Way do so through SEFA. Research Foundation employees contribute directly to the United Way.

"We're hoping to raise $100,000," said main campus coordinator Alan Entine in Human Resources who with Faith Merrick in Health Sciences Center Human Resources, is overseeing the campaign.

Dr. Aldona Jonaitis, vice-provost for undergraduate studies and Dr. J. Howard Oaks, vice-president for Health Sciences, are serving as co-chairpersons of the annual fund drive.

Last year Stony Brook employees contributed $53,000, a 123 percent increase over the previous year. Buoying this year's campaign, Mr. Entine said, is the fact that for the first time, university employees can designate two Stony Brook groups as recipients of funds: Stony Brook Child Care and the University Hospital Auxiliary.

Anyone who didn't receive a pledge card or who has questions about the campaign can contact Mr. Entine at 2-6140 or Ms. Merrick at 4-2092.

Blood Drive: The Faculty-Staff Blood Drive will take place on December 6, between 8:30am and 2:00pm in the Gym. Eat spinach, eat raisins and call Nancy Hutchinson at 2-6150 for an appointment.

Reading Group: The University Reading Group will meet on Tuesday, November 29 in Room 216 of the Stony Brook Union to discuss LOVE IN THE TIME OF CHOLERA by Gabriel Garcia Marquez, winner of the 1982 Nobel Prize for Literature. All welcome!

Smokeout: The Great American Smokeout will be held this Thursday, November 17. Give up smoking for just one day—and perhaps it will lead to another smoke-free day, and another, and another.

Seminar: Dr. Frederic J. Fay, Department of Physiology, University of Massachusetts Medical School will speak on Calcium Dependent Pathways for Regulating Smooth Muscle Function. The event will take place on Friday, December 2, in Room 038, Life Sciences Building at 12 p.m.

University Convocation Series: "Ethics in Scholarship: Saints and Scamps." Sponsored by Robert L. Lichter, Vice Provost for Research and Graduate Studies. A faculty forum. Panel: John C. Bierwirth, John G. Truxal, John J. Fiore, Anthony E. Weston, Andrea Tyree and Mary I. Scranton (moderator).

Nighthawks Open Jazz Trilogy

Vince Giordano and the Nighthawks open a jazz trilogy for International Art of Jazz on Friday, Nov. 18 at 8 p.m. The three-part concert series is held at the Staller Center for the Arts on the SUNY campus at Stony Brook.

The Nighthawks is a ten-member orchestra led by Vince Giordano, a multi-talented young artist who, since his teens, has been drawn to the Golden Age of Jazz and the bands of the Twenties, Thirties, and Forties. He has meticulously transcribed the recordings of Duke Ellington, Fletcher Henderson, Benny Moten, Bix Beiderbecke, Benny Goodman, and Glen Gray's Casa Loma Orchestra. "Listening to the Nighthawks is an uncanny, you-were-there experience," says IAJ Director Ann Sneed. "Vince has captured the music, note-for-note, but it's the sound he re-creates that explains The Nighthawks' mystique."

The series is made possible by a grant to IAJ from the Suffolk County Office of Cultural Affairs and, in part, by public funds from the New York State Council on the Arts and the National Endowment for the Arts. A subscription to all three concerts is $45; $33 for IAJ members. Tickets to individual concerts are $17.50 and two dollars less for students and seniors. To reserve tickets, or for information about IAJ's concerts or IAJ's very special Arts-in-Education Program, call Marti McCartney at (516) 632-6590, or write IAJ, 5 Saywood Lane, Stony Brook, NY 11790.
