ARA staff goes on strike, say food is serving itself. USB hires cannibal for part-time kitchen work

A pan of over anxious pasta not wanting to wait to be served has lead to a strike of all ARA staff employees.

"When the food serves itself, it's a violation of our contract," said Sloppy Joe, a cafeteria worker. "Once the pasta went, we had all four food groups jumping the counter."

"The meat group was last," said one student. "That wasn't so suprising. I was more shocked to learn that do actually serve meat."

John Rainforest, head of ARA (Alpo Recycled Automatically), said that he was unaware that the campus food had athletic properties. "If I had known I would have entered the baked macaroni in an intramural sport."

Aside from the initial shock, Rainforest said he believed that the food would grow tired of serving itself. "I know this food better than anyone, it's lazy and doesn't like to work. It likes to be served." Even though the ARA workers are still on strike, Rainforest said that he has already taken steps to replace those workers.

In a bold move the university has decided to hire prisoners as a type of work-release program.

"This is not some Willie Horton scam," said the University spokesman Al Sanomere. "We're looking to give deserving candidates a fair shot at rotting in a place like this."

One such candidate who notched the such a position is none other than Milwaukee mass murder, Jeffrey Dahmer.

"This sucks," said Sanomere. "We always get second-hand stuff from Milwaukee, first their beer, then the Yankees go for all that horrible Milwaukee Brewer pitching, now we're getting their psychopaths - used - as always. It's a damn shame."

Rainforest said that Dahmer almost lost the job before he even had it. "During the interview, somebody asked him if he wanted some finger sandwiches. That's when he flipped."

"He goes bezerk anytime a body part is mentioned. Rainforest said they struck a compromise. "He's allowed to work in the kitchen, but he has to take off on Cannibal Night."

Some students have refused to venture into the cafeteria for a meal until Dahmer is dismissed from ARA.

"If students do'nt want to eat, that's their problem. I'm satisfied with his performance so far," said Rainforest. "You've got to understand, we've got very strict rules. He's allowed to eat raw meat, but the second he tries to eat another student he's [Dahmer's] outta here. ... unless they're vegetarians."

"Hello. My name is Dan Sloppyman and I only party with the best. That's why I drink Mounted Moosehead Beer. It's got a clean, crisp taste that's not afraid to bite back. So, the next time you're stone drunk, but you're still thirsting for that extra buck, order the one that'll stand behind you - even if you can't."

340 lb. ex-senator rushed to hospital, survives scare

Allegations fly that Bruiseasy vows to capture prez and crush Sloppyman

Impeached senator Vincent J. Bruiseasy has resurfaced after two weeks in hiding, primarily because he can't hide anyone.

Bruiseasy has binged his way to an astonishing 340 pounds, up 150 pounds from 190. However, his weight gain has not been problem free.

Last week, a roving USB Weakly photographer spotted Bruiseasy being rushed to University Hospital via helicopter because it was feared that he had swallowed a local Burger King. Bruiseasy was rushed to the hospital with the assistance of a Public Safety officer and actor, Danny Glover. There was also speculation that Bruiseasy's wight gain is somehow tied into a possible cameo role in Lethal Weapon 3.

Bruiseasy was released the same day and insisted that there is nothing wrong with him despite the abnormal weight gain.

But several Polity insiders have insisted that the weight gain is a vital part of Bruiseasy's masterplan to attempt a re-entry into campus politics.

One Polity official said that Bruiseasy is planning to run for president this spring. "He is attempting to reach 1,000 pounds by the time the debates roll around," an anonymous source told USB Weakly. "Then while approaching the podium he will accidentally trip and land on current President Dan Sloppyman, killing him." Our source told USB Weakly that Bruiseasy being rushed to University Hospital by a Public Safety officer (left) and Danny Glover last week.

Bruiseasy. "He's hoping to crush the competition - literally."

Bruiseasy's alleged plan has been leaked to the Polity officials who brought about the original impeachment charges, and they say they are ready for action.

"Basically, we're going to nutrasize him," said Richard Coldsors, the senator who called for Bruiseasy's impeachment. "We're going to pass a resolution that will forbid the Union Station Deli or any and other campus eatery from selling food to Bruiseasy."

"I'm going to eat up the competition," said Bruiseasy. "I'm livin' large!"

Senator Fred Baptist said, "Bruiseasy just doesn't get it. It's not quantity, it's quality."

Senator Coldsors added, "You know what they say, the bigger they are the harder they fall." In response to that comment, Bruiseasy's campaign manager, ex-heavyweight boxing champion, George Foreman said, "We just hope that Sloppyman realizes that when Bruiseasy falls, he going to fall hard. Just like me, Bruiseasy's going to surprise some people."

Buses come less than 5 minutes apart, 33 students hospitalized for shock

Thirty-three commuter students suffered heart attacks yesterday and remain hospitalized today with serious cases of shock after a campus bus picked them up less than five minutes after another had left.

The first bus, loaded with commuters desperate to get on what they thought would be the last bus for 20 minutes, pulled away from South P lot at 9:16 a.m. Three minutes later, the next bus pulled in, and within minutes, the 33 students who had been waiting for it were lying in a tangled heap next to the bus.

"We always assume the next bus won't come until at least 9:35," said Clyde (The Glide) Chef, a passenger on the second bus, as he lay gasping in a sagging bed in University Hospital. "Could you please not print my name?"

Rolf Kramden, the head of campus bus service, issued a quick apology after learning of the incident. "We don't know what happened. We apologize for any inconvenience or disruption this event has caused. We are going to do all that we can so that this never happens again. We were all enjoying bagels and donuts in the bus depot. It's all so disturbing," said Kramden.

"I feel so bad. I had a feeling I was too early," said Sara Lee, the driver of the 9:19 bus. "I knew I should have had another Scooter pie." Lee said that only a dozen or so students went down when the bus first pulled up, but "the rest of them went down when I got out of the bus and tried to revive some of the first victims."

Dr. Colin Oscapy of University Hospital, who is overseeing treatment of the traumatized students, said all of the student except Bobby Hurley, the Duke point guard — "What an ugly kid," Oscapy exclaimed — were in unstable condition, but that no one was near death. "They're all swinging from being perfectly lucid to raving maniacs three or four times an hour," said the doctor, who credited the students with tremendous fighting power. Nevertheless, said Oscapy, "There is a good chance that they may never be able to ride buses again. They could be scarred for life."

According to ambulance driver Fast Eddie, emergency vehicles' response time, and then a subsequent meal, was a key factor in the students' survival. "You got to give us credit, man. The doctor is important and everything, but what would he do without the patient? We set him up to be the hero," said Fast Eddie.

"We got there only three minutes after Regis ended — most of them looked OK, some were just starting to turn blue," continued the ambulance driver. "We realized that we hadn't had our 10 a.m. break so before we took the kids to the hospital we took 'em to Denny's for their mouthwatering "Terrific Toast Tuesday" special, which features unlimited unbuttered brittle toast, black coffee and your choice of lukewarm water or ice. . . Hey for $1.99, you can't beat it. . . Besides we figured the kids didn't have any breakfast anyway. And Denny's said they would pay me if that appears in print."

University spokesman Al Sanomere, choked with tears, said he felt "very connected to this awful, terrible, horrific, tragedy" as a person who has ridden a bus during his lifetime. "Those big yellow buses are an integral part of Stony Broke. The university, especially me, grieves for the students and their families, all eight of them."

Meanwhile, student politicians tried to think of ways to exploit the bus shock incident. Commuter Senator Lee Weedwacker said, "This is an outrage," and blamed "this whole event" on the Sloppyman Polity Association, calling it "a systematic ploy to curb the number of commuter students at Stony Broke."

Asked what he knew about the condition of the students, Weedwacker, who was spotted taping flyers to the ambulances that came to the scene, said, "I hope they're all right. Those were half the students that voted in our elections last year."

"I felt like I did when we beat UNLV last year," said Hurley, who looks like Bart Simpson. "I wanted to hug Coach Krzyzewski, and when I couldn't find him, that's when I had my heart attack." Hurley refused to say what he was doing on the Stony Brook campus, and said he'd be back in action for the Final Four.

When asked about how students should approach the area that was going to be investigated by Public Safety, Sanomere said, "Just step over anything that looks important."

Phone sex leaves jilted jealous lover hung up

In an unusual chain of events, a student's ROLM phone made over $4,000 in calls to a Seattle-based 1-900 sex talk-line over spring break.

The resident was astonished to learn that he had racked up a bill of nearly $4,000 dollars during the 10 days he was away.

"I'm flabbergasted," said the student who asked if he could remain anonymous . . . NOT! His name is Cal Meanytime, a Kelly Quad resident. "I left campus Thursday night . . . I had a feeling something was wrong."

However, after Meanytime realized that the calls were to a Seattle-based sex line, his original shock, became a wild of jealousy. Apparently the ROLM phone had been having an affair with an answering machine in the Seattle area. Despite the distance, the two phones were said to have had their way with one another via modem.

The student had also been lovers with his ROLM phone. No one is sure if the ROLM phone in question had any other relationships.

Meanytime became enraged when he realized the two phones were faxing each other. At that point Meanytime became violent and abusive. When the ROLM phone felt it might have harm done to it, it called for Public Safety, who, believe it or not, responded immediately.

At about midnight, Meanytime saw six Public Safety approaching his building from his balcony. He immediately threatened to destroy the phone by throwing it off his third floor balcony.

By this time Public Safety had enough officers to form a bakers dozen. The four-hour standoff ended at 4 a.m. when a Public Safety officer hurled a stale munchkin at Meanytime. The munchkin struck Meanytime in the head, who stumbled backwards and fell over the railing. Meanytime did not die until he was being fed in the recovery at University Hospital.

At the time of the incident, the phone was treated for shock, and was disconnected for half a day. The phone has been physically unable to make any calls beyond campus, but is anticipating calling some of its friends in New York this weekend.

The phone is expected to request a move to another location. In a modem interview with USB Weakly, the phone said that it wishes to stay with a friend in Seattle, but refused to give the phone number.

Common Sense bares buns for bucks

Common Sense, the party vanquished in last year's Polity elections, has announced it will release a pin-up calendar featuring party members in hopes of raising money for their campaign this spring to overrun Polity.

The party hopes to raise $5,000 by the opening of official campaigning by selling the calendar, and plans to use the funds for posters, banners, and hiring students to rip down competitors' flyers. "If we have enough left over," said Red Herring, the leader of Common Sense, "we'll use it to pay off pollwatchers."

"We know this is going to sell," said Herring. "Once we've raised enough cash, then we'll get on with selling our ideas. We just don't want our campaign to be like Paul Tsongas'."

The idea for the calendar came from a marathon strategy session held by Common Sense last month, said party operative Adam Lee Coleco. "We were fresh out of ideas," he said, "until someone said, 'Hey, why don't we bare a little flesh?'"

Herring said at first that the calendar would be released either when Polity comes out with the much-anticipated Teacher and Course Evaluation book or when the Common Sense party gets some respect. He then reflected and felt a more realistic date would be "March 32nd."

"Look at the success of JFK and Wild Bill Clinton — you can't argue with those results. You've got to know your constituents," said Herring. "Here at Stony Broke it's buns, buns, buns. If we can't appeal to them ideologically, we'll have to do physically. We would rather utilize other methods of campaigning, but hey."

Herring said none of the photos would be released before the calendar is published, sometime after March 32nd. USB Weakly has learned, though, that the centerfold of the Common Sense calendar will be party gadfly Airhead Rosenfertilizer.

Polity President Dan Sloppyman, asked what he thought of Common Sense's strategy, said, "They think they can intimidate me into baring my butt. But I wouldn't stoop that low. Hey, I said, 'butt. But' — isn't that something?" Continued Sloppyman, "Besides, I've seen the centerfold picture, and that's not even Airhead Rosenfertilizer's body — believe me, I know."

Centerfold Rosenfertilizer contended that the body is his. "While everyone else was curling brewskys at Daytona, I was pumping iron. I'm 120 pounds of bulging muscles." Of Sloppyman, he said, "He's just jealous."

Herring told USB Weakly that he hopes to sell the calendars for $10. "We haggled about the price for a long time and felt the calendar was worth the money. We're talking about Grade A beef." Herring went on to say that the calendars would be "fat." When asked what he meant by "fat," he said that he wasn't quite sure, but that he had heard officers of the Student Activities Board use the term repeatedly, so he figured it was something good.

On the surface the calendar would appear to be in direct violation of Common Sense's stance concerning controversial funding by the National Endowment for the Arts. But Herring said that he would send Tipper B. Sure, an overprotective parent who is the wife of Senator Al B. Sure, the first copy of the calendar. "In fact," said Herring, "I'm going to sign my name across my butt like Roseanne Arnold and big 'ol what's his name."

Herring said he was not concerned that the release date for the calendar, which will cover the year 1997 — "we couldn't match the days and the dates, you know," said Coleco, "until that year, 'cause it'll be the same as some previous year" — was too soon. "We know there are a lot of sexually repressed people on campus who could probably use a calendar for that year," he said. "In fact, they'll be able to enjoy them for a full five years, won't they?" So far, though, the only advance orders have come from the College Republicans.

Steinbrenner to bat for USB's baseball Division I move

At a recent press conference held in Stony Brook's Holiday Out Yankees owner George Steinbrenner unveiled his plans for helping the USB baseball program successfully make the move to Division I status.

Following the 1992 season, Steinbrenner promises that he will provide the financial backing the university would need to make the transition. He plans to accumulate the necessary capital for the enormous Division I budget by raising the price of beer to $6.25 a cup.

When questioned by a reporter that beer prices might already be astronomical, the former boss replied, "If you ask me, that's a pretty small price for the fans to pay to help make what is an otherwise dull game seem even remotely entertaining."

Although his true motives remain unclear, much speculation has been made that Steinbrenner has repeatedly sought for an amateur baseball team he could own, control and exploit since being banned from professional baseball two years ago.

Steinbrenner dropped a second bombshell at the press conference when he announced that he intends to bring his own coaching staff to Stony Broke. He intimated to the stunned audience several of his prospective choices for managerial and coaching positions. Listed below is a rough sketch of what the new coaching staff might look like for the 1993 season:

- Recently released Yankee shortstop Alvaro Espinoza, a career .243 hitter, will sign on as batting coach.
- Former Yale starting pitcher George H. W. Bush to take on the role of pitching coach after being given his pink slip in November.
- Steinbrenner said he would like to have ex-con Pete Rose as his strength and conditioning coach, but the odds are against it.
- The manager's position is up for grabs, although Steinbrenner's attorneys are currently seeking Whoopie Goldberg to act as a conduit for the ghost of Billy Martin.

In a show of support for the proposed Division I elevation, Stony Broke alum Roseanne Arnold has promised to sing the national anthem before each home game as well as versions of the hit-song "I Touch Myself."

While Steinbrenner was climbing into his limo

after the conference had ended, a reporter asked him if he thought this undertaking might be in direct violation of baseball commissioner Fay Vincent's controversial ruling. The former boss' face turned red and he responded, "Tell that fat-headed wimp to go stick it."

USB Weakly editor mamed in printing mishap Mysterious death coupled with surviving hand that chronicles Strong's final minutes of terror

Otto J. Strong, USB Weakly executive editor, was killed in a bizarre printing press mishap when he, according to witnesses, jumped into a printing press at the Polity Print Shop in the basement of the Student Union Building Monday.

Strong's funny bone was crushed in the mishap. Miraculously, however, Strong's hand survived the ordeal. At a seance Strong requested that USB Weakly let his hand write this story, instead of another staff reporter. No one is quite sure why.

"I don't know how it happened," said Strong. "One minute I was a normal human being, and the next minute I felt like I was passing through a salad shooter. Within eleven seconds in was Purina Dog Chow."

Christine Traci Lords, the manager of the Polity Print Shop, was distraught to learn that Strong had died in the Print Shop. "Now how am I supposed to print up these Polity newsletters?" she asked.

As usual, Public Safety said that the case has them baffled. However, after overhearing a portion of a press conference attended by Dave Jokin, editor-in-chief of Statesmess, Strong's hand has determined that foul play was involved.

Jokin, Strong's former editor at Statesmess, told USB Weakly, that the campus will never be the same, but a CNN news camera later overheard Jokin say that, "it was about time Strong was iced. All I ever heard was, 'Funny Bone' this, and 'Funny Bone' that, . . . well there ain't no 'Funny Bone' no more." Jokin went on to say, "Well it looks like those voodoo dolls really do work. Let's see if we can make a Dick Young doll and have it march in a gay rights parade."

After the press conference Strong's hand challenges Jokin with the information obtained by CNN. Jokin became enraged and tried to attack Strong's hand. Jokin was restrained is now facing a Judiciary hearing. Judge Wapner will be presiding.

Strong's family could not be reached for comment, primarily because Strong knew that if he contacted his family his folks would want his hand to take out the trash before they would answer any questions.

"Well for one thing, he's a hell of a lot shorter," said University spokesman, Al Sanomore. "Of course the university is saddened by the loss, I think that's some sort of university policy."

Current managing editor, Christina Brown, will take over for Strong. "It's a shame he had to go out like this, I mean we rarely ever printed anything," said Brown. "I always would have figured he would have choked on some chili."

Strong said he is going to relax for the net couple of weeks or so. He says he must undergo a lot of rehabilitation in the weeks ahead. "We've got to tape an account of this for 'A Current Affair' next month."
