LETTERS

To the Editor:

I'd like to ask if anyone has an extra Specula 1970 and/or 1971/72 which they would like to sell an old alumna whose memory is getting dimmer and who needs to rely on visual stimuli more often lately. I know that I may never have an opportunity to make this request again, and, who knows, I may be assisting someone who feels compelled to unclutter their lives, but feels too guilty to throw away memories of Stony Brook in its glory! I'll be helping them and keeping memories alive at the same time.

Help! Help! Thanks! Thanks!

Ethel (Jacobs) Levine '71
(B.A., Elementary Education)

Editor's note: If you can help Ethel out, contact the office of the alumni magazine, and we'll provide her phone number and address. Call us at 516-632-9116.

To the Editor:

Junie and I have moved back to California to our home, after experiencing a terrible year, 1993, with crime. Our family has rebounded nicely by replacing our car and restoring our home.

It has been a year since we first became members of the Alumni Association. I want you to know that even though we are almost three thousand miles away from Stony Brook, our participation is not manifested in mere words. [contribution enclosed]

It is my desire to say to other alumni, no matter where you are and what your situation, we need you to join Debbie Dietzler and others to make Stony Brook a place that could improve the lives of our children in the new century. Black, White, Asian, Hispanic, or no matter who you are, let us come together now. You don't have to be living in New York to participate. Even if you were not active while you were on campus, now is your time to make a difference.

To the Editor:

The Worth a Thousand Words photo brought back memories. Some of the police officers not seen in the photo, however, were there and later got their master's degrees in C.E.D – 1974, Rahill, Siegel, Finnerty and others – so we all weren't "enemies" of the students.

Calling all Photographers!

From the Editor:

We're having a photo contest, and we need you to make it a success. Entries will be in two categories, "Memory Lane" and "Anything Goes." Memory Lane photos should recapture something about your Stony Brook experience. As for Anything Goes pictures, well, you can send portraits, landscapes, abstracts – you get the general idea. You may submit in both categories, but send only one entry for each. We'll have another contest next year.

You may submit black and white or color prints (not slides), but most winners will be reproduced inside the magazine in black and white. We hope to put the winning entry on the front or back cover, which can handle color.

Prizes of little intrinsic worth (but incredible symbolic value) will be awarded. Best of all, winning photos will be printed in the magazine. That means 55,000 copies of your picture will be sent around the country, plus a few will travel to alumni abroad. (We can offer fame, if not fortune.)

Judges will be the staff of the magazine and members of the Alumni Magazine Advisory Board. No entry fees or bribes are required, but donations to the Alumni Association to help cover costs are always welcome.

The deadline for submissions is February 15, 1995. Winners will be announced in the Summer issue. Please enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope if you want your picture returned. We may hold some entries for future use as "Worth a Thousand Words" pictures. We'll let you know.

Please be sure to include your name, class year and major, phone number (for verification only), current work, and any personal or professional news you might want to share. For the Memory Lane category, please give us some history of the picture, too, so we'll know what we're looking at: When was the photo taken? What's happening? Who's in it? Is there a story behind the picture?

Before closing, let me add that it's been a pleasure working with you and for you over the past few years to produce Stony Brook. Your enthusiastic response to the magazine has been immensely satisfying.

The letters, stories, reflections, photos and suggestions you send in are always welcome, and we use them as space permits. When you write, always include your graduation year and major as well as a contact phone number. We won't print the phone number, but we may need to call you for further information.

When you write and tell us what you like or don't like about the magazine, you help us create a better publication, one that comes closer to matching your needs and interests. In the next issue, we plan to enclose a reader survey inviting your responses. If you'd like to suggest questions for the survey, please send them to us. We hope this will give you an opportunity to help shape the future of your magazine.

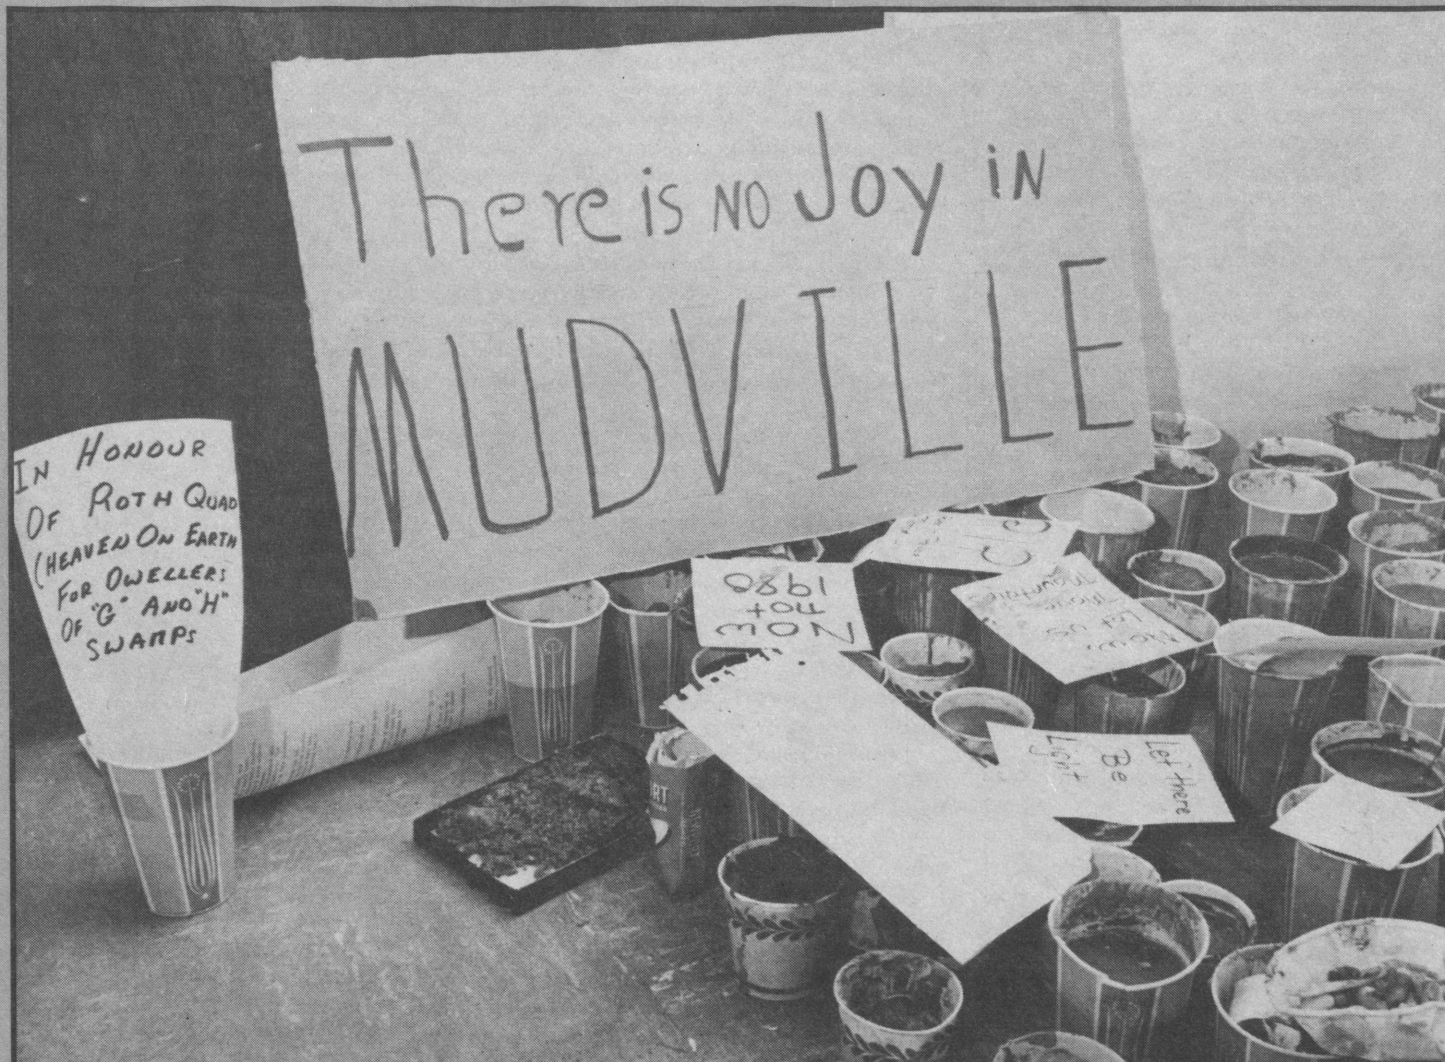

Hoping to hear from you soon,

Gila Reinstein, editor

Send photo contest entries by February 15, 1995, to:

Enclose a SASE if you want the photo returned. Thanks!

Were you there? Tell us about it, and we'll print the story in a future issue of Stony Brook magazine.

To the Editor:

I recently received a copy of the Stony Brook Alumni Association magazine and thoroughly enjoyed catching up on an important part of my life. I attended Stony Brook from 1968-72... During my first year, I was elected the freshman representative of student government and participated in discussion sessions concerning the drug raids by the police and the eventual closing of the university during spring semester of 1969.

I mentioned the drug raids because of my new position. I am the first drug court judge in Southern California. The guiding philosophy of drug courts is the immediate and intensive intervention after initial arrest by the court system. The drug-addicted defendant is required to complete an intensive one-year treatment program under the supervision of the courts. My court has been in operation almost six months, and we have 200 clients.

My memories of Stony Brook are very pleasant ones. I played on the First Club Football Team, served on the governing board of the student center, spent a semester in Washington working for U.S. Senator Birch Bayh, worked concert security and met the many famous rock stars and musicians who played at Stony Brook.

The most gratifying part of attending Stony Brook was the chance to mingle with a wide range of individuals with different lifestyles than my own... Keep up the good work.

Students go head-to-head over primitive tools.

A Page Right Out of History...

Flint knapping is a Stone Age technology that involves squatting on the ground and rubbing rocks together to make primitive tools. It's taught today at Stony Brook by Assistant Professor John Shea in his undergraduate anthropology course. Students replicate methods used over 60,000 years ago, learning to recognize tools and the way they were employed by early man.

"For example, we can tell whether society's natural resources were abundant or scarce," says Dr. Shea. Tools that have a lot of chipping around the edges had to be recycled; societies with smoother tools had enough raw material to throw the old ones away. They were like the pens and pencils of the Stone Age."

So Much More than Chicken Parm...

The Italian-American experience goes way beyond old ladies in black, street fairs, pizza and other stereotypes. There is a rich, varied culture with its own history, social realities and literature, says Richard Gambino, scholar and teacher of Italian American Studies at Stony Brook. Dr. Gambino, a visiting professor who established the first Italian American Studies Program in the country at Queens College in 1973, is author of Blood of My Blood: The Dilemma of Italian Americans, and is currently working on a book comparing contemporary immigration from Third World countries to earlier waves of immigration primarily from Europe.

Brooklyn-born of Sicilian parentage, Professor Gambino earned his doctorate in philosophy from New York University in 1968. He has lectured widely and hosted radio and television programs on ethnic and educational issues. He has taught courses on the Italian American family, Italian Americans in film, ethnicity in American history, and more.

Professor Gambino was a featured speaker at the Museums at Stony Brook's forum on "Old Ties, New Attachments: Italian-American Folklife in the West," a traveling exhibit from the Library of Congress that was on view at the Museums this fall. Last spring he gave the keynote address at the New York State Legislature's annual Italian-American Legislators Conference.

The University's Center for Italian Studies hosted its tenth annual symposium on the Italian American experience in October. This year's conference focused on "Italian American Studies Programs and Organizations: Interface with the Community." The keynote speaker was Fred Salerno, chair of the SUNY Board of Trustees and vice chair of the NYNEX board of directors.

Top National Rankings

The University has made two of the nation's top consumer ratings lists, one published by Money magazine, the other by U.S. News & World Report.

Money's special Money Guide: The Best College Buys Now, which hit the newsstands in September, ranks Stony Brook fifth in the Northeast and twenty-second in the nation in terms of America's best higher education value.

In the Northeast, Stony Brook placed ahead of Dartmouth (7), Columbia (10), Harvard (15), Cornell (20), and Fordham (23).

U.S. News & World Report ranked Stony Brook twenty-second in its listing of best values nationwide, and in the second tier among America's best colleges.

Earlier this year, four graduate programs made U.S. News & World Report's listing of America's Best Graduate Schools. Among the top 25 in the nation were Stony Brook's geology, mathematics, physics and sociology programs.

New Lab/Arts Course

Give a group of student-artists, composers, and theatre people high-tech computer equipment and what do you get? A new interdisciplinary course that teaches undergraduates to create animation, interactive computer programs, special-effects music videos, and whatever else they can devise by mixing creativity with technology.

The course is the first for the new Laboratory for Technology and the Arts, taught by Music Professor Daniel Weymouth, Theatre Arts Professor David Zucher Saltz, and Artist-in-Residence Darcy Gerbarg. Each of the instructors has computer expertise to share with the 15 students in the pilot program. Eventually, the arts lab will offer additional courses as well as opportunities for individual and group projects.

"The boundary between the disciplines is being eroded," says Dr. Weymouth, "and new art forms are being created. Students need to be conversant with all these." That opportunity is now available through hands-on exploration and manipulation of sounds and images in the Laboratory for Technology and the Arts.

Cooking for Scholar(ship)s

Let's talk turkey... and tomatillo chili... fresh peach pie... and hot cakes. Yes, Carol Marburger's new cookbook, All the President's Menus – The Sequel, is selling like hot cakes. The cookbook focuses primarily on informal dining based on recipes and menus that promote healthful eating.

Your copy, which can be personally signed by Mrs. Marburger (wife of the University's past president and gourmet-extraordinaire), is available at the Annual Giving Office, 330 Administration, University at Stony Brook, Stony Brook, NY 11794, or by calling Theresa at (516) 632-6303.

All proceeds support student scholarships at Stony Brook. Make your $15 check payable to the Stony Brook Foundation/Cookbooks for Scholarships. A few copies of All the President's Menus, are also available. This book features recipes for formal entertaining. Reserve your copy today.

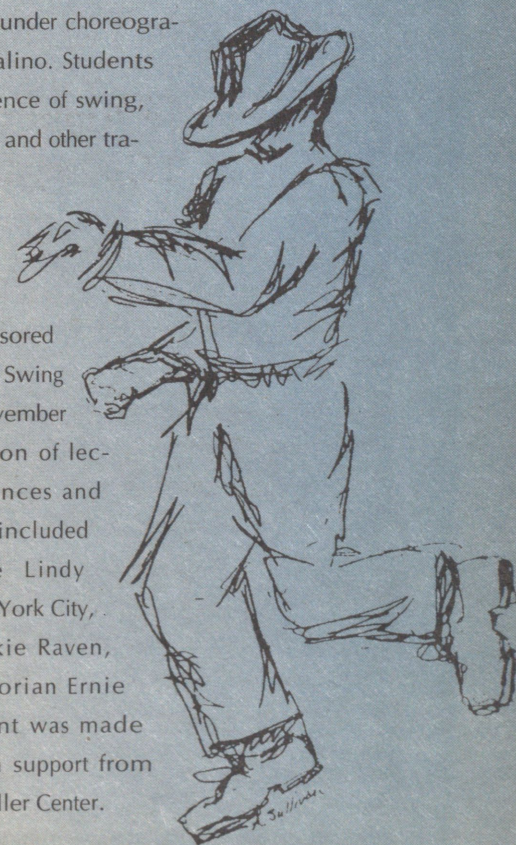

On Tap (Something to Dance About)

"People don't dance in a vacuum," says Theatre Arts Associate Professor Amy Sullivan. "There's history and sociology behind what dancers do."

To deliver that message, Professor Sullivan inaugurated a new course this fall: "Tap Technique and History." Tap dancing has enjoyed renewed popularity on stage in recent years and has attracted academic interest because of its multicultural origins, she notes. And besides, she adds, "Tap is fun. It's playful and challenging."

The class combines theory and practice, encouraging students to "think, feel, sense and create" while they learn, according to the professor, who has studied with the American Tap Dance Orchestra under choreographer Brenda Bufalino. Students explore the influence of swing, rhythm and blues, and other traditions on dance.

In conjunction with the new course, Stony Brook sponsored a "Celebration of Swing and Tap" on November 12. The afternoon of lectures, performances and demonstrations included the Big Apple Lindy Hoppers of New York City, tap dancer Jackie Raven, and dance historian Ernie Smith. The event was made possible through support from Friends of the Staller Center.

Fighting Cancer

Two researchers who are studying new ways to treat breast cancer received this year's William and Florence Catacosinos Awards for Cancer Research.

James Bliska, assistant professor of microbiology, received the Catacosinos Young Investigator Award and Iwao Ojima, professor of chemistry, was named the 1994 Catacosinos Professor in Cancer Research. Bliska's honor carries with it a $10,000 award; Ojima will receive $5,000.

In addition, C.R. Ramakrishnan, a graduate student of computer science, has been awarded the William W. and James W. Catacosinos Fellowship for Excellence in Computer Science, which carries a $4,300 cash award and a full tuition scholarship.

Dr. Bliska investigates the effect of abnormal protein tyrosine phosphatase activity on the intracellular function of a protein found in human breast cancer. Dr. Bliska proposes to change the action of the proto-oncogene on cell transformation by introducing a phosphatase that acts in opposition to the kinase. Successful suppression may lead to new therapeutic strategies for breast cancer.

Dr. Ojima is conducting research on new anti-cancer agents through systematic modification of taxol, a drug used for the treatment of breast, ovarian and lung cancers. His successful syntheses of taxol-like compounds more potent than the natural products provide the means to develop drugs that are easier to administer and cause fewer undesirable side effects.

Working on optimizing compilers for functional and logic programming languages, Ramakrishnan developed the EQUALS system that automatically executes a functional language on parallel computers. He also developed a powerful and superfast compiling technique for optimizing logic programs.

The Catacosinos awards were established in 1978 with an endowment from William Catacosinos, chair of the board and CEO of Long Island Lighting Company and former member of the Stony Brook Foundation Board.

Bibles at Harvard

Bible stories were among the first books ever printed for children, and they have continued to be popular ever since. How writers and artists tailor the familiar stories for young readers tells a great deal about a society's attitudes towards childhood and religion.

An exhibition of children's Bibles, past and present, called "Sacred Stories, Eternal Words, and Holy Pictures," was on view at Harvard University's Houghton Library this fall. Stony Brook alumna and faculty member Ruth B. Bottigheimer (D.A. '81), curated the exhibition and spoke at the related symposium.

Dr. Bottigheimer joined the faculty at Stony Brook in 1984. Before that she taught at Princeton University. She was awarded a Fulbright in 1990 and is a Life Fellow at Cambridge University's Clare Hall.

In 1995, Dr. Bottigheimer will be on the graduate faculty of Hollins College in Roanoke, Virginia.

Her books include Grimm's Bad Girls and Bold Boys and Fairy Tales and Society.

Gorillas In the Swamp

In March, Diane Doran ('89, Ph.D., Anatomy), assistant professor of anthropology at Stony Brook, will return to the Congo's remote Ndoki Forest and its western lowland gorillas, the least studied of all African apes. Her purpose: to determine whether the availability of food influences social patterns. Mountain gorillas, who live in stable social units (generally one male with several females), eat foliage that is widespread and readily available. Chimpanzees, who eat fruit that is not consistently available, live in noncohesive, fluid groups that grow and shrink in response to the food supply.

Lowland gorillas eat fruit, like the chimps, but are close relatives of the mountain gorillas. Is their social structure more like the apes with whom they share a diet or the apes with whom they share genetic makeup? In other words, how important are diet and distribution of food to social organization? That's what Dr. Doran wants to find out.

She will observe the lowland gorillas and chimpanzees for five months a year over the next several years. What she learns is expected to shed light not only on living apes, but also on early hominids. Our ancestors' diet has been established by previous research in hominid anatomy and tooth structure, as well as through archeological excavations, but their social behavior is harder to determine from fossil records. Dr. Doran will study our closest living relatives to try to understand our distant forebears.

Last year, she set up a research center at the site, one of very few dedicated to this species. It will be staffed by a graduate student assistant and three Congolese trackers all year round. Dr. Doran will join them part time.

"It's the most remote place I've ever been," she says. And she's seen a few. Her interest in this line of research began when she was a Peace Corps volunteer in Zaire. "I liked the rain-forest and I liked the primates," she recalls. When she completed her tour of duty, she enrolled at Stony Brook because it is one of very few programs that combine the study of anatomy, primates, and human evolution.

On finishing her doctorate in 1989, she took over the work of primatologist Dian

AMY WILFAHRT

Diane Doran en route to her research station by canoe, with assistance from Richard, a Congolese tracker.

Fossey at the Karisoke research station in Rwanda, continuing Fossey's landmark study of mountain gorillas. In 1991, she returned to the U.S. and took an academic appointment at Duke University. She joined Stony Brook in September 1993.

Dr. Doran's long-term study in the Congo will take place at a site that requires an adventurous spirit and strong legs to reach. From the capital city, she flies to the town nearest the Ndoki Forest. From there, she travels 12 hours by boat, disembarks and treks for two days through 25 miles of swamp to reach her home-away-from-home, a dank tent with spartan living conditions.

But it's well worth it, she says. "To see things for the very first time that no one has seen before...to be learning something every day - it's exciting."

Hospital Names New Chief

Dr. Michael A. Maffetone has been named chief operating officer and director of University Hospital as well as administrator of the University Medical Center.

Dr. Maffetone, 44, grew up in St. Albans, Queens, and in Bethpage, completing his undergraduate and master's degrees on Long Island before pursuing a doctor of arts in medical technology at Catholic University in Washington, D.C.

Ten years ago, he moved to Chicago's 1,000-bed Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center. There, he held several key positions, most recently as senior associate vice president and director of the Women's and Children's Hospital. At Rush, Dr. Maffetone developed an ambulatory care network, a patient-focused care model, and a managed-care contracting strategy. He co-founded the West Side Science and Math Excellence Network, a nationally recognized science and math mentoring program for the Chicago public schools, with the help of a coalition of public and private corporations.

He joined the staff here, he says, because, "Stony Brook's educational programs have an excellent reputation, and the people here are serious about their community service mission in addition to their patient care, education and research missions."

Landmark Sex Study Makes Sociologist a Star

Sociology Professor John Gagnon is at the center of a media feeding frenzy.

"I've been on the Today Show, 20/20 and interviewed for national magazines and newspapers," says Dr. Gagnon of the whirlwind publicity accompanying publication of two new books based on a landmark study he conducted with colleagues at the University of Chicago. The study is the most comprehensive survey of American sexual habits ever undertaken.

The books are Sex in America, by Dr. Gagnon, Professors Robert T. Michael and Edwin O. Laumann of the University of Chicago and New York Times science reporter Gina Kolata, and a more academic treatise, The Social Organization of Sexuality, by Drs. Gagnon, Michael, Laumann and University of Chicago researcher Stuart Michaels.

Their conclusions – that Americans are sexually more conservative than previously believed – touched a public nerve. "Many people feel reassured that their lives don't fall off the charts," Dr. Gagnon says.

Among the revelations:

- Partners. Americans have sex about once a week, but a third of adult Americans have sex a few times a year or not at all.

- Marriage. Almost all Americans marry; 75 percent of married men and 85 percent of married women say they have remained faithful.

- Homosexuality. Five percent of men and four percent of women report having a homosexual relationship as an adult; 2.8 percent of men and 1.5 percent of women say they are homosexual or bisexual.

- Abortion. Seventy-two percent of women who had abortions had only one, and young teens are most likely to abort a pregnancy.

- AIDS. AIDS and HIV infection are likely to remain largely confined to gay men and intravenous drug users, their sexual partners and their children, and are unlikely to become epidemic in the general population.

The study, sponsored by private foundations, grew out of a proposal in 1987 to gather information on adult sexuality in response to the spread of AIDS.

A 'Living Legend'

Amiri Baraka, professor of Africana Studies, playwright, poet, fiction writer and essayist, has had quite a year, and the coming months promise to be full of triumphs as well. During the summer, he received the 1994 Feroni Prize, an Italian literary award given in several categories, including one for an outstanding foreign writer. Dr. Baraka was selected by a panel of scholars and traveled to Italy to be honored.

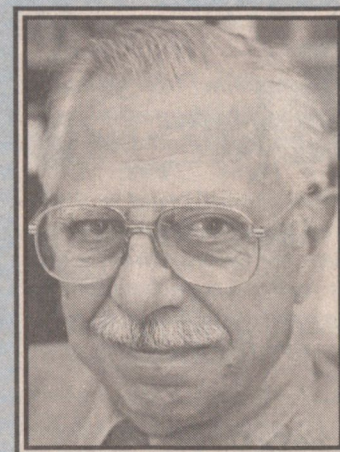

Three of his books are scheduled for publication this year: Why's Wise, The Griot's Tale, a book of poetry (Third World Press, Chicago); Jesse Jackson & Black People, essays on Jackson since 1972 (Third World Press); and Eulogies, memorials written over the past 20 years for figures such as James Baldwin, Dizzy Gillespie, Sun Ra and others (Marsilio, Milan, Italy).

The former LeRoi Jones, who rose to prominence in 1964 with the publication of his play, Dutchman, Dr. Baraka is author of a large body of original work, including a jazz opera commissioned by the Paris Opera Company and an autobiography published in 1984. A comprehensive anthology of his works, Amiri Baraka/LeRoi Jones Reader, was published by Thunder's Mouth Press in 1991, edited by William J. Harris, professor of English at Stony Brook.

Last year, Dr. Baraka was awarded the Wallace Stevens Prize for poetry by the University of Connecticut, and he was named a "Living Legend" at the National Black Drama Festival in Wake Forest, North Carolina.

On the faculty at Stony Brook since 1983, he has also taught at Yale, Columbia, George Washington and SUNY at Buffalo.

Distinguished Service Honors

Velio A. Marsocci, professor and chair of the Department of Electrical Engineering, was one of 10 faculty members in the State University of New York (SUNY) system to be named Distinguished Service Professor by the SUNY Board of Trustees this year.

A member of the College of Engineering and Applied Sciences faculty since 1965, Dr. Marsocci has been adviser to student professional and honor societies, including Tau Beta Pi, the national engineering honor society; the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers (IEEE); the National Society of Professional Engineers (NSPE); and the College of Engineering and Applied Sciences Student Association.

He is an active member of Tau Beta Pi, IEEE, NSPE, Eta Kappa Nu, Sigma Xi, the American Physical Society, and the American Society of Engineering Education.

Honoring Our Own at Homecoming

At Homecoming, the Alumni Association honored two extraordinary graduates of Stony Brook, Paul Anderson (B.S. '78) and Louis Pigno (Ph.D. '69), with the Distinguished Alumni Award, and acknowledged the contributions of an inspiring professor, Albert Haim, with the Outstanding Professor Award. They were feted at a brunch on Saturday, October 15, in the company of family, friends, colleagues, professors and representatives of the Alumni Association.

LOUIS PIGNO PH.D. '69

Louis Pigno has been called "the world's master in harmonic analysis," and a "mathematician of considerable stature" by his colleagues. His most famous work – on the Littlewood Conjecture – led to an answer that had eluded mathematicians for over half a century.

He completed his doctorate at Stony Brook in 1969 under the guidance of Professor Raouf Doss, having earned a bachelor's degree from the Polytechnic Institute of Brooklyn, an M.S. from New Mexico Highlands University and an M.A. from the University of Connecticut.

When he left Long Island, he took an assistant professorship at Kansas State University (KSU) and has remained there ever since, rising through the ranks to become full professor and, since 1985, department head.

Under his leadership, the Mathematics Department at KSU has grown in size and stature. He instituted a model program of research colloquia for undergraduates, created links between the university and the local high schools, and enhanced the school's reputation as a premier doctoral institution for the study of mathematics.

Dr. Pigno has won many awards, including National Science Foundation grants and the Distinguished Alumnus Award from New Mexico Highlands. He has published extensively in mathematical journals, especially in the field of Fourier analysis.

Irwin Kra, dean of Physical Sciences and Mathematics, says, "I have followed Pigno's career as a mathematician and administrator since his days as a graduate student at Stony Brook... Louis Pigno exemplifies the characteristics that we seek to endow in our students. He is a talented teacher/scholar and administrator."

PAUL ANDERSON, B.S. '78

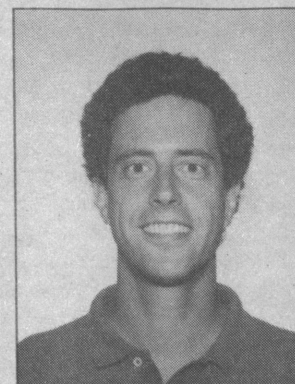

Dr. Anderson (M.D., Ph.D.) is a biochemist, physician, researcher and faculty member at Harvard University. He majored in biochemistry at Stony Brook, working with Professor William R. Bauer on a definitive study examining the impact of ionic environment on the winding of DNA. He continued his education at the Medical Scientist Training Program at NYU to earn double degrees, doing research on human interferon that has yielded practical applications.

He completed his residency in internal medicine and became a clinical fellow in rheumatology at the Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston and Harvard Medical School. He is now a member of the faculty of medicine at Harvard and performs cutting-edge research at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute studying "natural killer cells," implicated in causing cancer and rheumatological diseases.

A board-certified rheumatologist, Dr. Anderson has received many awards and grants. He is a recognized expert in his field on the national and international levels.

In the words of a colleague at Harvard, Professor Charles N. Serhan, "Dr. Anderson exemplifies the high standards set for the Stony Brook student. He has high morals and is committed to improving the quality of life through active basic research, patient care and teaching. He has developed an independent, nationally recognized research program and has fostered the development of many younger scientists."

According to Stuart F. Schlossman, professor of medicine at Harvard and chief of the Division of Tumor Immunology at Dana-Farber, Dr. Anderson is "one of the most gifted individuals that I have ever met, and it is clear that his introduction to laboratory research at Stony Brook had a profound impact on his career. He is a true talent, a congenial colleague and a wonderful mentor for young people. Paul is a creative man with taste, a rare breed in medicine."

OUTSTANDING PROFESSOR ALBERT HAIM

Chemistry Professor Albert Haim has been a fixture at Stony Brook since 1968. Over the years, he has inspired thousands of students in courses from introductory to advanced and has won teaching awards from the Office of Undergraduate Studies, the Vice Provost for Undergraduate Studies, the SUNY Chancellor, and the students themselves.

According to William Le Noble, professor and chair of chemistry, "Time and again, I have been told by former students of their tremendous admiration for Albert Haim; how his style has influenced greatly their own style of teaching, research, administration and even parenting."

Alumnus Craig A. Gerken '92 wrote of "the lively and energetic way in which Professor Haim taught the class [and] the enthusiasm which he conveyed to the students."

Kenneth Leopold '77, now associate professor of chemistry at the University of Minnesota, worked closely with Dr. Haim as an undergraduate at Stony Brook and recalls, "The daily implementation of ethical standards, the enjoyment of true scholarship, and the dedication to quality work can, for me, be traced directly back to my four years with Albert," calling him "the one individual who took an otherwise fine experience and made it stellar."

Born in Paris and brought up in Montevideo, he earned his undergraduate degree from the University of Uruguay and his Ph.D. from the University of Southern California. He pursued postdoctoral studies with Henry Taube at Stanford University. Over the years, he has received continuing funding from the National Science Foundation for research in inorganic reaction mechanisms and served as an American Chemical Society lecturer at colleges and universities across the United States.

President Kenny Gets Going

Dr. Shirley Strum Kenny, Stony Brook's new president, announced her initial priorities this fall when she gave the keynote address at the University's first annual Convocation, a landmark event marking the beginning of the academic year. Students, faculty, staff and community members came in such large numbers that after the Main Stage auditorium was filled to capacity, an overflow crowd was directed to the Recital Hall, where the ceremonies were broadcast on a large screen.

At the Convocation, students and staff members were singled out for honors, and the campus was introduced to the new members of the Honors College and the leaders of student government. Music was provided by the Gospel Choir, the Chamber Singers and the Stony Brook Brass Players.

In her address, Dr. Kenny named some of her preliminary goals. They include:

- creating a new national model for undergraduate education at Stony Brook that incorporates research opportunities;
- streamlining administrative functions;
- increasing external fund-raising;
- improving the image of the University;
- increasing the diversity of both the student body and the faculty.

Dr. Kenny called Stony Brook "the flagship campus of SUNY," and noted, "The research and graduate mission of the University at Stony Brook will always continue to be central to our mission and our commitment to the State." Still, she cautioned that, "To be a truly great university, we must also be notable – and widely recognized – in the arts, the humanities, and the social sciences. The rounding of our strengths, which has already begun, will mark the maturity of the University at Stony Brook."

She stressed the importance of improving the undergraduate program, saying, "There seems to be unanimity in the belief that we must make giant strides in our undergraduate program. I will assure you that there can be no great public research institution in our time that does not excel in the undergraduate as well as the graduate. Times have changed. Undergraduates matter." Specifically, she plans to establish a national blue ribbon committee to create a new model for undergraduate education at major research universities.

She spoke of the need to promote a feeling of community on campus, the importance of establishing realistic long-range plans, and the significance of determining and communicating the University's image.

"Stony Brook is a university on the move, where new things are happening, new ideas are tried, innovation has stretched from the classroom to the business/university interactions. We've made great medical and scientific discoveries, and we will initiate new modes of undergraduate teaching. Our diversity will make our research and our pedagogy stronger as we move from celebrating diversity to building commonalities between persons of different backgrounds. We are increasingly cooperative, collaborative, innovative. We take teaching seriously. We are where the action is."

Helping Ease the Health Care Crisis

Responding to dramatic shortages in health care personnel on Long Island and throughout New York State, the School of Health Technology and Management (SHTM) has expanded its programs for the first time since the mid-1970s.

"Expansion is important," says Lorna McBarnette, dean of the school, "because the health care industry is telling us that it needs workers desperately and that it cannot function without the kinds of graduates we turn out. It seems essential that we meet their needs."

In the fall of 1994, the enormously popular baccalaureate programs in physical therapy and physician assistant education admitted 30 to 40 percent more students than last year. By the year 2000, enrollment is expected to increase from the current level of 60 students per program to 100.

Respiratory care training, a component of the Cardiorespiratory Sciences program that met its demise in the budget difficulties of two years ago, was resuscitated this fall.

A new program in cytotechnology, the study of tissues, was established this fall.

Under development and awaiting state approval is a program in occupational therapy. Still in the planning stages are undergraduate programs in radiologic technology, dietetics, and medical records administration and graduate programs in speech and language pathology and audiology.

Much of the funding for these expansions comes from the State Health Department. Edward Salsberg, director of the State's Bureau of Health Resources Development, was keynote speaker at SHTM's Homecoming reunion.

*...And the rockets' red glare,
The bombs bursting in air...*

Is it the battle of 1812? The opening game of the World Series? The Fourth of July? Not quite. It's really like all three rolled into one.

No, it's none of the above, and it's all of the above:

It's Stony Brook Homecoming 1994.

We are experiencing the dawn of a new era at Stony Brook. One could say that the seeds of this dawn were planted over 35 years ago. Recently, a number of groups and individuals have tended to those seeds and are now finally cultivating the fruits of their, and many others', labors...

Wednesday kicked off an exciting weekend which no one would have believed could be so "glorious." Late in the evening, the Polity Senate approved a measure that will ensure that what followed for the rest of the weekend was not a once-in-a-lifetime event. The athletic fee increase was supported and passed, and the ball started rolling.

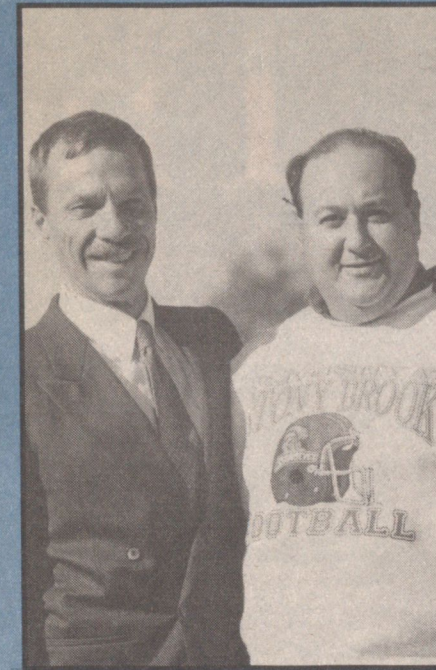

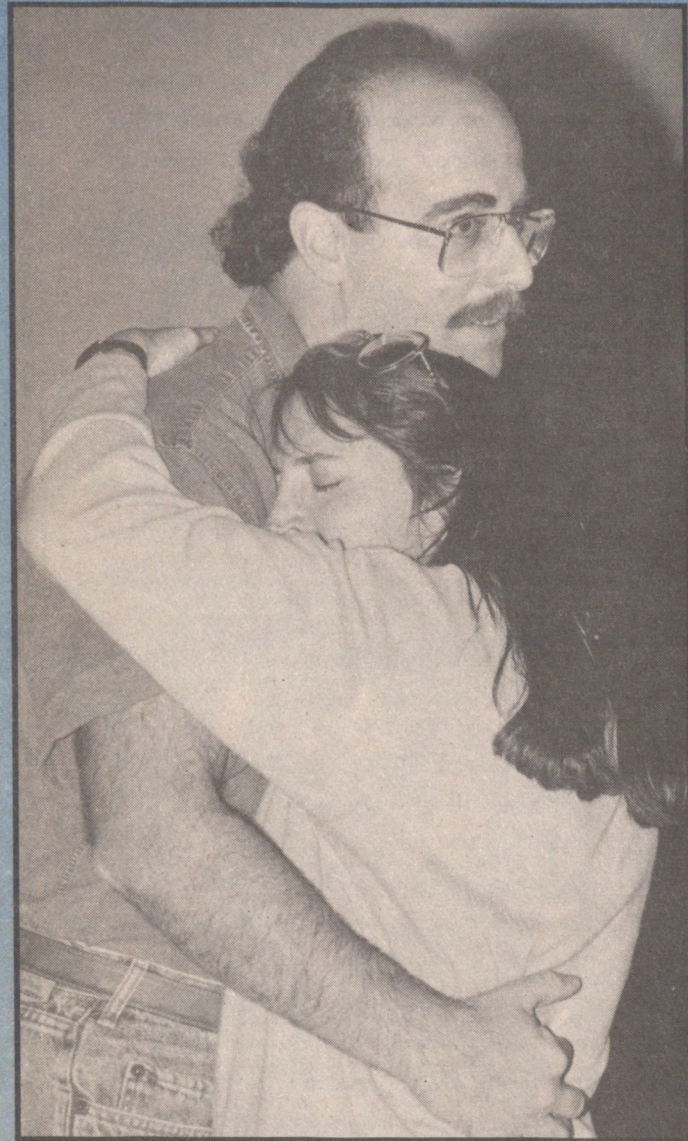

Thursday began with the ribbon-cutting ceremony at the re-opening of Roth Quad. Later in the afternoon came the re-opening of the Roth Food Court. From there and from elsewhere, they marched by the hundreds to Seawolves Field.

Last year, seniors, including then-Polity President Jerry Canada, called Spirit Night "the greatest thing I have seen in the four years I've been here"...

The sentiment was still that Spirit Night is the greatest single event of the year. But, this year, there were more people. There were people who were more "spirited." There were more people saying, "Stony Brook is a great place to be." There were people wearing specially made shirts for the event. There were people with their faces painted Scarlet and Gray. There were people with pom-poms and megaphones and Stony Brook and Seawolves merchandise.

And then, after truly inspiring performances by the Step Boosters, Kickline, Cheerleaders and champion baton-twirler Claudia Schlitz, the night sky lit up. There they were – 2,000 people, looking skyward, watching the blinding light show with smiles on their faces, – one University, one community, one Spirit.

And when classes broke on Friday, it started again. A volleyball tournament in the arena of the Indoor Sports Complex, a mock-up Caribbean cruise in the Pritchard Gym, balcony cookouts and parties in the residence halls 'til the wee hours of the morning. And when the sun rose, Stony Brook was flooded with alumni from its 35-year history. From breakfast to evening cocktails, there was no lack of things to do. The parade was as big as or bigger than ever. The tailgate party rocked for hours on end. Seawolves Field was so packed that the bleachers could not accommodate the throng. Alumni reminisced until it hurt. A new mascot and a new attitude: it almost seemed that Stony Brook would explode from the excitement...

Spirit? At Stony Brook? Yes, Virginia, there is a Santa Claus. The dream has come true.

The Stony Brook Statesman would like to thank our alumni who visited our offices after the football game. As usual, we had as much fun as you did. Note to all Statesman alumni: you are welcome at the offices at any time - especially production nights!

Scholar, Educator, Humanist

Juan E. Mestas M.A. 1974, Ph.D. 1985, Hispanic Languages and Literature

Few people can keep so many balls in the air, but Juan Mestas has been a master juggler for some time. Now second in command at the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH) in Washington, D.C., Dr. Mestas is a scholar, an educator, and an academic administrator who has mentored and inspired students, friends and colleagues for a generation.

"Juan is the reason I got my master's degree," says one friend who graduated from Stony Brook in 1973. "Because of him, I left a dead-end job in Puerto Rico and came to graduate school at Stony Brook," says another, who now heads an academic department. A third used to call him late at night during their student days to discuss personal problems and take comfort in their friendship.

Appointed deputy chairman of the NEH last April, Dr. Mestas is responsible for overseeing the day-to-day operations of a 270-person federal agency that last year awarded nearly $160 million in grants to support research, education, preservation projects and public programs in the liberal arts.

Hard to believe that Juan's mother used to worry he would become a juvenile delinquent. When Juan was 12, his father died. He dropped out of school and began to get into trouble. To help him pull his life together, Juan's mother sent him from their comfortable home in pre-Castro Cuba to a military boarding school in Tennessee when he was 14 years old. Looking back on the rigors of the Columbia Military Academy, he admits, "I liked it. It was away from home and I had the opportunity to assume responsibility for myself. There was structure and discipline, but the atmosphere wasn't repressive." And he definitely liked living in the States.

While he was home for the holidays in 1959, Fidel Castro rose to power. The political turmoil caused only a ripple in 16-year-old Juan's life at the time, and he returned to school after vacation to complete the year. Not long after, his world changed radically: the family moved to Puerto Rico, where his older sister had already settled. Juan attended the Universidad de Puerto Rico, earning a bachelor of arts in 1966 with a major in Hispanic studies and linguistics. His college career took him a bit longer than the usual four years because he was suspended from school at one point for participating in anti-war activities. After graduation, he worked in Puerto Rico and edited a literary journal.

Then he received a letter from Stony Brook inviting him to enroll in a brand-new graduate program in Hispanic languages and literature. The year was 1971, and the fledgling program was under the direction of Professor Ivan Schulman.

Dr. Mestas remembers the early 70s at Stony Brook fondly; when he was a politically active graduate student, an eager young faculty member and the administrator of an academic program, all at the same time. He earned his master's in 1974 and went on for the doctorate, which he completed in 1985 with a dissertation on José Martí, a 19th century Cuban revolutionary writer. Martí's concept of the working class was the focus of his study, published in 1993 as El pensamiento social de José Martí: ideología y cuestión obrera.

Like many graduate students, Juan was a teaching fellow, but, unlike most, he became a regular faculty member and also chair of the (now-defunct) Puerto Rican Studies Program.

Professor Pedro Lastra recalls the magic of those early years: "The greatest interest at the time was on Latin America, especially the Caribbean. Expectations were great... We felt that we were creating something of lasting value."

The students who were recruited into the program formed tight bonds of friendship that have lasted to this day. They shared a love for Latin American culture and, says Dr. Lastra, "That understanding brought them close together." (Please see accompanying story.)

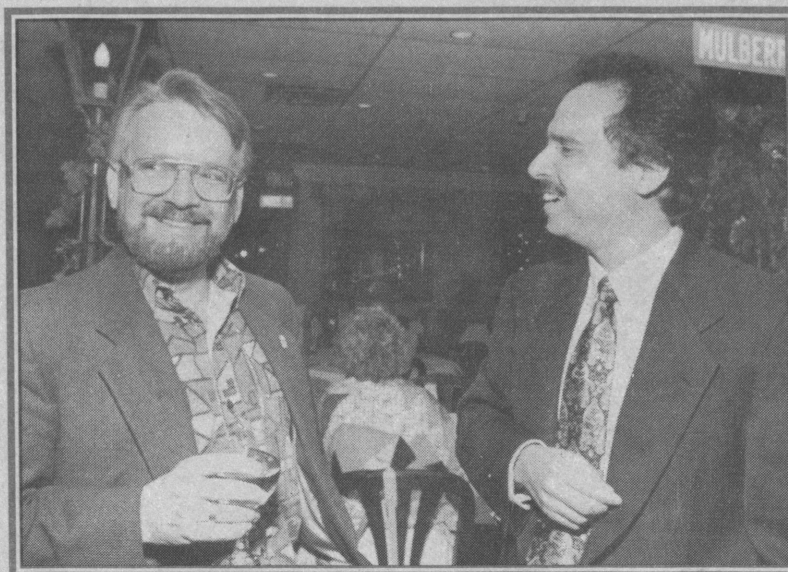

They were all close and it was a great group, but Juan was special. "I think that everybody in the group sensed that Juan's lucidity, intelligence, and kindness – those salient traits of his personality – made him a sort of big brother of the group. He was always ready to help them with advice and with actions," Dr. Lastra recalls. "Even I benefitted from his wisdom: In conversations from which I always learned something, he helped me understand the local academic culture. And we had some good times exploring New York City together."

That was an era of campus unrest, and the different roles produced a certain amount of conflict for Mestas. "I saw myself most strongly as a student in those days," he recalls. "From one day to the next, I was the rebel and then the enemy."

Juan had other responsibilities as well. Under the direction of Bill Godfrey, who is now lecturer with the Suffolk Partnership Program, he worked as a counselor for Upward Bound. Stony Brook no longer offers Upward Bound, a college preparatory program for economically disadvantaged and academically underprepared high school students, but Mestas used that experience to land his next job.

He left Stony Brook ABD (All requirements for the doctorate completed But Dissertation) in 1976 and went to San José State University in California, where he directed the Upward Bound Program. Under his leadership, San José's Upward Bound was rated one of the nation's most successful by the U.S. Department of Education.

In 1982 he joined the staff of California State University to work in student services. Over the course of 10 years, he headed up Retention Services and Educational Equity Programs, Educational Access Services, Educational Opportunity Programs and Student Development. He also led classes and coordinated leadership programs sponsored by the American Council on Education (ACE). One year he interrupted his work in California to accept an ACE/Pew Fellowship at the University of Pennsylvania, working closely with thenversity president Sheldon Hackney, who now heads the NEH. This program trains top-echelon academic administrators. Following that, Dr. Mestas went to Washington, D.C. as a visiting associate of the ACE.

In 1992, he moved to Portland State University in Oregon to work in a combination of roles that are not often held by the same person: he was simultaneously vice provost (providing academic administration), dean of students (directing student services) and associate professor of foreign languages and literature (pursuing teaching and scholarship).

This was quite a juggling act, and he loved bridging the gap between the lecture hall and administration. He enjoyed his part in making Portland State "the prototype of the urban university. We were doing fantastic things in educational and administrative reform," he recalls.

That is why, when the NEH called last spring to offer him their number two spot in Washington, D.C., Dr. Mestas hesitated. But he couldn't say no to the call to service.

"If you're called to serve, you serve," he says. Besides, the request came directly from Dr. Hackney, his former mentor at Penn. Juan took a leave from Portland State, packed his bags, and drove across the country to Washington, D.C.

Commenting on his deputy, Dr. Hackney says, "Juan Mestas is a dedicated teacher, a skilled administrator and a lifelong proponent of the humanities.... I can think of no other person who could bring as much energy and as many talents to the Endowment."

At the NEH, he says, "We don't establish cultural policy or tell people what to do. We are enablers. We enable things to happen in the humanities." As the NEH's founding legislation explains, "Democracy demands wisdom and vision in its citizens."

Many Stony Brook faculty members have

NEH funding, such as Christina Y. Bethin for "The Syllable in Language: A Study of Polish," Matthew F. Jacob for "Cultural History of the Racial Idea and Identification 'Caucasian,'" Anita Moskowitz for "Monumental Sculptures of the Italian Renaissance: Saints' Shrines," and Clyde Lee Miller for "Learning and Teaching in Plato's Protagoras and Meno."

Not all the projects are academic or esoteric. When Dr. Mestas joined the NEH, the television special on baseball by Ken Burns was in the works, and Juan – a longtime baseball fan – got to see unedited portions of the miniseries the rest of us watched in October.

Today he lives in Washington, which he finds "a very intense city. There's nothing like it on the West Coast. Everything in Washington overlaps with politics." Even his job is political, and he serves at the pleasure of the President of the United States.

"I admire the President," says Dr. Mestas. "He appeals to the best in the American people: to hope, service, selflessness – to our best values; not to selfishness or fear."

Hope, service, selflessness and values. Friendship, scholarship, kindness and decency. Dr. Mestas understands these well and cultivates them in his life and in his work. He's been doing it for years and he makes it look easy.

The Reunion

Juan Mestas came back to Stony Brook last August to reestablish ties made close to 20 years ago. He and about a dozen others traveled from Washington, Spain, California, Georgia, Florida and elsewhere to exchange news, show pictures of absent children (and grandchildren), laugh and reminisce.

All of them had been students at Stony Brook in the '70s and early '80s – most recruited for the fledgling graduate program in Hispanic Languages and Literature. They were here when the Bridge to Nowhere went nowhere. They saw the construction of the Fine Arts Center, now called the Staller Center for the Arts. They trudged the campus when it was a sea of mud. Stony Brook was an exciting place to be, and those in the Hispanic program knew they were building a world-class department.

Originally hailing from Cuba, Puerto Rico, Honduras, Spain and Texas, they shared a heritage that was primarily Hispanic. At Stony Brook they grew into an informal family that stayed in touch over the years and the miles that eventually separated them.

One of their mentors in the early days was Professor Pedro Lastra. "This is a group of generous, friendly people," says Dr. Lastra. "From the very beginning, I realized that their love for Latin American literature emerged from an understanding of the profound cultural unity among those countries and cultures. That understanding brought them close together, cemented their friendship."

In addition to intellectual interests, they were connected by emotional bonds. Dr. Lastra says, "In Juan and in this group, came together personal values that seldom come together at the same time and in the same individuals. I knew that I could count on their friendship, and I think they knew that I saw them as more than students."

Ondina Hidalgo Carrier recalls, "We came from everywhere and had different social backgrounds. Some were very rich, others not. We were all different ages." None of that mattered because, "these are very caring people. When things were bad, they were there. You didn't even have to ask. It was true then, and it's true now. These are lifelong friendships." She still considers former classmate Sandra Ruiz to be her best friend.

While at Stony Brook, they studied hard and partied hard. When time permitted, they organized recitals and lectures, inviting scholars, poets and artists to campus. Discussions would continue late into the night, "spiced with wine, songs and dances, at one of our homes," Dr. Lastra remembers. Rubén Gonzalez would take out his guitar, and the singing would begin.

Together they founded and edited Tlaloc, a Spanish literary journal for the Aztec god of rain. Dr. Lastra was faculty advisor.

"We are all published in it," says Francisco Alvarado-Juárez, adding, "It wouldn't have been possible without Juan," who had worked on a similar magazine in Puerto Rico. "This was my real education," Alvarado-Juárez says. In its heyday, Tlaloc was distributed all over Latin America. "I loved the hands-on work and the gratification of having an instant product," he recalls. They used the facilities of Statesman, in those pre-computer days, "when pasteup was really pasteup."

Franklyn and Carmen (Santiago) Perez met in the lobby of the Stony Brook Union where he was manning a Student Activities table. Walking through the Union during the reunion, Frankie recalled, "We protested in this very lobby many times – Angela Davis' arrest, military recruitment on campus, all kinds of protests." Frankie was president of the Puerto Rican Students Organization, which later merged with the Latin American Students Organization.

"We inherited the revolutionary spirit of the 60s," according to Dr. Gonzalez

When they visited Stony Brook this summer, they saw less mud, more flowers. They shopped for souvenirs, posed for one another's pictures. They agreed to get together again before 20 more years elapsed.

For Francisco, "Stony Brook completely changed my life. The experience was almost magical." Juan Mestas summed it up: "I'm happy that I graduated from this campus."

Miler to Marathoner

In Stony Brook's 35 year history, very few of our student-athletes have gone on to compete on a world-class level. But track and field standout Gerald O'Hara '86, who competed at the mile distance in college, has moved on to excel in a different race: he now ranks as one of America's best marathoners.

O'Hara started running competitively in high school. Attracted to the academics at Stony Brook, he came intending to study science. He decided to concentrate on business, instead, and became an economics major. He now manages a company that sells irrigation equipment.

His maturation as a runner began in college. Under the watchful eye of Coach Gary Westerfield, O'Hara ran on the cross country, indoor track, and outdoor track teams. He primarily ran the mile, but took a different turn after graduation, not on the track, but on the road.

He began to enter 5K and 10K races to keep his skills sharp. Long-distance running appealed to him, and, in November 1989, he began training for marathons. By the spring of 1990, he was ready to enter his first 26-mile race.

That race just happened to be the world famous Boston Marathon, but Gerry was not intimidated. He finished his first race in an incredible time of 2:33, an outstanding accomplishment by any standards.

He then turned his sights to New York City and on a blistering November day in 1990, stood on the Verrazano Bridge awaiting his second marathon. O'Hara outperformed all other American runners, finishing in 2:26. For this accomplishment, the New York City Roadrunners Club awarded Gerry a $12,000 training stipend. The next year, he competed in his second Boston Marathon and ran his best time ever, 2:23.

These days he continues to train and run marathons, but recently his family has played a bigger role in his life. Two years ago, he married his wife, Marion, and a year later their first child, Sean, was born. Perhaps someday Sean will run the mile for his father's alma mater.

O'Hara isn't shy about expressing his enthusiasm for Stony Brook athletics moving to Division I. "While academics is the reason you are in college, a good athletic program serves to strengthen the bond and spirit between students and alumni to the college," he says.

Lacrosse Assistant Coach Named World's Best Goalie

This past summer Stony Brook's new assistant lacrosse coach Sal LoCascio (see photo) was named All-World goalie at the World Games in Manchester, England. LoCascio, a member of Team USA, led the top-ranked American team to an impressive 25-3 win over England in the semifinals and a stunning 21-7 victory against Australia in the championship game.

During the summer of 1993, LoCascio was one of 120 players invited to try out for the World Team. Twelve of those contenders were goalies. Only three goalies made it to the final team, including, of course, Coach LoCascio. The players immediately began a one-year exhibition season to prepare for the World Games.

When Team USA arrived in Manchester for the games, they were ready and then some.

The Americans outscored their five opening-round opponents 108-36, including an 18-5 win over England, a 33-2 trouncing of Japan, and a 14-12 victory against Australia.

Team USA led Australia 9-1 and held on for the win in a game which was dramatically delayed twice because of heavy thunderstorms.

"Before the championship game against Australia, the English papers had quotes from the Australians saying if the first game had been five minutes longer, they would have beat us," explained LoCascio. "Those quotes made it to the locker room wall, and we went out and pounded them 21-7."

So much for media hype.

At the conclusion of the World Games, an All-World team is chosen and a separate listing is made of best player for each position. For his outstanding play, LoCascio received both team and individual honors.

"Being named All-World is nice now, after the tournament," admitted LoCascio. "But there's no better feeling than winning. If I could show you a picture of 26 guys jumping around the trophy, to me, that's what makes it all worthwhile. I hope to instill some of that winning attitude in the Stony Brook lacrosse program."

LoCascio was a four-time All-American at the University of Massachusetts, leading the UMass Minutemen to the NCAA Division I Lacrosse Tournament for four straight years, including "Final Eight" appearances in both his freshman and senior years.

He joined the Stony Brook coaching staff in January, 1994.

Division I Update

By Richard Laskowski, Dean of Physical Education and Athletics

Next year, at the beginning of the 1995-96 academic year, Stony Brook will officially make the transition to the NCAA Division II level. To facilitate the transition, we pursued membership in a strong Division II conference and were extremely fortunate to have received an invitation to join the New England Collegiate Conference (NECC). The NECC, whose member schools reside primarily in Connecticut, New Hampshire, Massachusetts and New York, is considered one of the most prestigious and successful Division II conferences in the nation. In fact, NECC members have won several NCAA Championships in a variety of sports in recent years. The NECC should prove to be a tremendous stepping stone for our eventual move to Division I, and we are looking forward to the challenge of competing at this new level.

Last Thanksgiving, for the first time in our history, a Stony Brook athletic event was broadcast on television. This fall, to build on last year's success, we negotiated a television package with SportsChannel to broadcast five home athletic contests and one away men's basketball game on a regional level. In October we televised our women's soccer matchup against local rival St. John's, and our Homecoming football game against Norwich University. On January 19, we will play at Division I Hofstra in men's basketball, also to be televised on SportsChannel. During the spring season, we will televise three lacrosse games against national lacrosse powerhouses such as North Carolina, the Naval Academy and Rutgers. I hope you will watch us compete on air.

Homecoming Weekend was a tremendous success. The exciting changes at the University, including this year's theme of "Dancin' with Seawolves," proved to be a tremendous draw as we received the largest alumni Homecoming turnout to date. In addition, our baseball, lacrosse and volleyball programs each held alumni reunions, giving former stars a chance to come out and see former teammates, view the exciting changes at their alma mater and relive past glory. I urge all alumni to find some time to visit the campus to witness the extraordinary changes taking place throughout the University.

This year we held a "Midnight Madness" celebration to kick off the start of our men's and women's basketball season. A crowd of over 1,200 students packed the Sports Complex at the midnight hour to partake in the fun and display their enthusiasm for our basketball program. A new spirit is taking over the campus, and we encourage alumni to take part in it.

The division created two new student groups to support our athletics program. The Wolfpack consists of student-athletes who will impact on the University and the surrounding local communities through public-service projects. Meanwhile, the Student Seawolves Club, or "Fang Gang," is a student booster club developed to promote, support and rally the student body around Seawolves athletics. There has been an overwhelming membership response to both organizations.

Some of our upcoming events include a men's basketball game at Madison Square Garden that will pit the Seawolves against Western Connecticut. Our third consecutive appearance at the Garden will take place on January 22, 1995, and will precede the always rugged Big East battle between St. John's and Pittsburgh. If you are interested in purchasing tickets for the basketball doubleheader, please contact Associate Director of Athletics Greg Economou at (516) 632-7120.

From the Office of Alumni Affairs:

As 1994 draws to a close, we find ourselves reflecting on an outstanding year for the Alumni Association. Membership continues to grow, making it possible to produce a wide variety of events. We are proud of our accomplishments and grateful for your support which makes this success possible.

This year saw us focus on much-needed student programming. We ended the spring semester with "Stony Break," a coffee and donuts event in the library during exam week. The students certainly appreciated this interruption from their studies, so we are planning to make this a part of finals week each semester.

We helped open school in a bigger way as well. For the last two years, the Association had been hosting a welcome brunch on move-in day, but we decided to try a barbecue for the 1994 opening. While our other events were well received, this year we fed nearly 3,000 hungry new students and their families. This program was a major part of opening weekend and it was very beneficial for the Association to be present for the first day of these students' Stony Brook careers. If we can do our part to enhance the campus experience, we can ensure a healthy future for the Alumni Association.

Programs aren't the only area where we've undergone expansion. This year we added membership benefits and expanded our logo merchandise offerings with diploma frames and a holiday ornament program. Of course, we always welcome your suggestions for ways to improve.

The new year is full of promise for us – 1995 marks the 30th anniversary of the Stony Brook Alumni Association. We hope to celebrate 30 years of service to the university with an unparalleled year of growth. You can help us by becoming involved. We encourage you to remain a player in the life of the University and our Association.

With best wishes for a happy, healthy 1995,

Welcome Barbecue

MAXINE HICKS

Approximately 3,000 people attended the August 29 Alumni Association Welcome Barbecue where they enjoyed hamburgers, hot dogs, chicken and ribs after they had settled themselves (or their children) into the residence halls.

The Alumni Association continues to make strides in campus programming. In 1992 and 1993, we welcomed the new students on move-in day by starting their USB careers with a complimentary brunch. This year, we decided to take things to a higher level and hosted the barbecue.

The Alumni Association would like to particularly acknowledge the generosity of Sports Complex Concessions, without whose assistance this event would not have been possible.

Stony Brook Foundation Honors Two at Dinner

Two members of the University community were honored for their contributions at the Donor Recognition Dinner on Saturday, November 5. In a setting that transformed the Sports Complex atrium into an exotic garden, over fine wines and food, more than three hundred of the University's major donors applauded as President Shirley Strum Kenny presented awards to Professor Chen Ning "Frank" Yang and Elizabeth Backer '93.

Noted throughout the world for his distinguished contributions to physics, Nobel Laureate Frank Yang, who has held the Albert Einstein Professorship on campus since 1966, is also a force when it comes to fundraising for Stony Brook.

A member of the Stony Brook Foundation Board of Directors since 1981, he serves as the Founding Chairman of the John S. Toll Society which was established in 1993. The Society, named for Stony Brook's first president, recognizes donors who make planned gifts, such as trusts and bequests, to the University.

Almost 15 years ago, Professor Yang founded the Committee for Educational Exchange with China. He continues to raise funds for this program which provides fellowships for graduate students from China to further their studies in Stony Brook's Department of Physics. His efforts also brought to Stony Brook the Sir Run Run Shaw Fellowships for graduate students from ASEAN nations in scientific and technological fields and an endowed lectureship named for Sir Run Run Shaw.

Elizabeth Backer, who graduated magna cum laude in '93 with a B.A. in Psychology, worked as a caller with the Telefund, Stony Brook's phone appeal program for alumni, parents, faculty and staff.

In her three years with the Telefund, Ms. Backer raised over $200,000 in pledges and set a record as Stony Brook's most successful student caller. Her recipe for success is simple — her own regard and enthusiasm for Stony Brook inspired people to give!

Dear Fellow Alumni:

The following pages list the names of the 4,321 University at Stony Brook alumni benefactors who contributed between July 1, 1993 and June 30, 1994. Every donor is listed because every gift is important.

Alumni gifts are precious to Stony Brook because they create the margin of excellence that government funding cannot provide. Alumni support assists public universities such as Stony Brook to attract the most talented students; build the most modern campuses; implement the most innovative programming; support the most advanced research; create the most extensive libraries; develop the most competitive athletics; offer the most creative arts, and recruit the most sought-after faculty.

All can be obtained only through your tax-deductible gifts to the Stony Brook Foundation, and all of which build the reputation of the university as well as the value of our Stony Brook degrees.

We encourage you to review the Honor Roll of Donors. Look for your name and the names of your classmates and associates.

If you are among our donors, we thank you! Your past support made a difference at USB. Of course we rely on your continued support so you will be hearing from us in the coming weeks seeking your commitment to this year's Annual Fund.

If you are not among our donors, we hope you will join our Stony Brook Forum, a dedicated group of alumni who have contributed $500. Our Honor Roll of Donors will recognize as well the dedication of our Leadership Club (those who contribute $250 annually) or the Century Club, which at $100 remains our most popular level of alumni support.

Whatever you can afford, whether it be $500, $100 or $35, it is most important that you are with us. Send your gift today and be among the first to contribute to the University at Stony Brook this year and reserve your spot on the next Honor Roll of Donors.

Please join us in supporting our alma mater! Every gift matters, especially yours.

Sincerely,

Virginia & Tim

Virginia Palmer Beaulac, BA '80, MA '81

Optical Sensing for National Space Program

Ray Russell '72 B.S., Earth and Space Sciences

Ray Russell has won the 1994 Aerospace Corporation Achievement Award for his work in the field of infrared and optical sensing for a national security space program.

Since 1981 he has been a research scientist in the Engineering and Technology Group of the Space and Environment Technology Center at the Aerospace Corporation in California. Aerospace is a nonprofit organization providing engineering and scientific support to Air Force space programs, national security space systems and other U.S. and international space agencies.

The research which earned him and a colleague the prize involved observations of three sets of objects: stars and the planet Jupiter, viewed from a site in Arizona; targets released from a rocket launched from Wallops Island, Virginia, as well as stars, viewed from a site in Massachusetts; and scenes in a test chamber at the Lockheed Corporation in Palo Alto, CA.

After Stony Brook, Ray earned his doctoral degree in astrophysics at the University of California at La Jolla. He went on to do three years of postdoctoral research at Cornell, specializing in infrared wavelength measurements (.7-200 microns) taken from airplanes in flight. During those years he co-discovered the singly ionized carbon line, an emission that comes from carbon after an electron has been stripped off. This line, at 157 microns, is in the far infrared range, and has been used as a diagnostic tool to study galactic structure and the energetics of clouds of gas and dust in space.

At Aerospace, Ray won a Group Achievement Award in 1986 for his work in airborne astronomy. Since then, he has been pursuing research in the calibration of infrared sensors in spacecraft, specifically for the Midcourse Space Experiment (MSX) of the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization, scheduled to be launched this fall. In addition to tracking military targets, the MSX's civilian applications include climate databases and astronomical sources.

Ray and Andrea (Radochay '72) were divorced after 20 years of marriage. They have a son, Brian, 16.

Hoax (1974-1994), revealing the "deepest, darkest secrets" of their involvement in the Amity Horror case. Sherlock Holmes' Daughter Comes to LightRebecca Viets Morean '84 M.A., English

As a student, she was Rebecca Viets, but you may know her by her pen name, Abbey Pen Baker. Just last month, St. Martin's Press published her novel, a mystery called In the Dead of Winter. The book tells the story of how Myrl Adler Norton and her friend, Faye Martin Tullis, unravel the bizarre circumstances surrounding a murder and learn the truth about Myrl's long-dead father, Sherlock Holmes. The story is set in Vermont in 1918, and "has all the flavor of a true Sherlock Holmes classic," according to Sena Jeter Naslund, author of Sherlock in Love.

Rebecca has written other novels and published stories in a variety of literary magazines (including "Departures" in this fall's issue of Kalliope), but In the Dead of Winter is her first full-length novel to be published.

At Stony Brook, she studied with Professors Thomas Flanagan, Paul Newlin, Stacy Olster, Helen Cooper and others, in the graduate creative writing program. Claire Frost, who now teaches in the English Department, was one of her classmates. Morean recalls, "Tom Flanagan was my mentor and really encouraged me — he understood the validation process a writer goes through. I had given up law school to pursue writing, and his support and belief were very instrumental."

She met her husband, Carl Plumer, in the fiction writer's workshop. They were married in 1983 and graduated together the following year. Carl is president of his own business, First Word Communications, a multimedia company

Making Art News

Pura Cruz '88 B.A., Art

Whiting Wicker

"Adam Gives Birth-1999" (6'3" x 5', mixed media, 1990), by Pura Cruz.

Artist and filmmaker Pura Cruz '88 has been very busy lately. Here's a rundown of some of her recent accomplishments.

Midtown Manhattan: Pura's work was displayed in the train station at 42nd Street and 6th Avenue, as part of an installation by Carol Hamoy. Untold millions saw the exhibit.

SoHo: A group show, "Gathering Medicine, Coast to Coast National Women Artists of Color," at the Art in General Gallery, included work by Ms. Cruz. The show, sponsored by the Women's Caucus for Art, was written up (favorably!) in The Village Voice.

Riverhead, Long Island: She was curator of "Rediscovering the Latin Artist" for a show mounted by the East End Arts Council last summer.

In classrooms across New York State: "Whose Got the Flag?" – a teaching video produced by Pura, was listed in the New York Arts in Education Directory and was featured in the 10th Anniversary Suffolk Film and Video Festival, 1993. Other recent films include Pura's Knees: Self Portrait (1994) and Time Stamp: Rediscovering the Latin Artist (1993). In addition, her work was included in the "Curator's Choice" video produced in May 1993, Artists Talk on Art.

Nationwide: Her startling mixed-media work, "Adam Gives Birth-1999" was featured in a special "Viva Latina!" issue of Heresies, a feminist magazine that focuses on the interplay between art and politics. The piece, from her Adam-1999 series, conveys a futuristic image of male birth. An explanation of the piece in Pura's own words is included with the article. She writes, "The series, Adam-1999 definitively propelled me into the futuristic future, carrying me from personal history to public history. Creating as well as seeing art involves examining our own prejudices and preconceptions. The theme of male birth...hits hard against these preconceptions."

Pura, her husband, George Kropinak, and their children live in Port Jefferson, where she maintains a studio.

report that he and Melissa Petrosky were wed on June 19, 1994. Still Here After All These Years

Donna Di Donato '80

B.A., Sociology; '83 M.A., Sociology

Donna Di Donato remembers the day she got her acceptance letter from Stony Brook: "I was so excited. I thought, wow! I'm really in."

She came, liked what she saw and stayed. Donna earned her bachelor's degree, went on to complete a master's, and is now just about "ABD" (All requirements completed But the Dissertation) for her doctorate in sociology. She's planning to finish the degree in the near future with a study on the impact of cognitive testing on the American educational system. In the Sociology Department, she has taught courses on ethnic relations, sociology of the family, Introduction to Sociology, and more, and won the President's Award for Excellence in Teaching.

"The image of Stony Brook when I was a student was that this was a great place for research, a place for growth. People were proud to be here. And I think we're back on that trajectory," she adds, from her current perspective in the Office of Undergraduate Studies where she runs programs that serve many of Stony Brook's brightest students: the Honors College and Program, the Simons Fellowship Program, the Freshman Scholars and Presidential Scholars programs, and the Sigma Beta Honor Society.

"We try to bring the resources of the University to these students quickly: research opportunities, the Staller Center," all sorts of enriching experiences that Stony Brook has to offer.

On the flip side, "We want them to give something back to society. We want their education and their ability to have an impact beyond the walls of the University. We encourage these students to be responsive to their roles as leaders," she adds.

Members of Sigma Beta, for example, must not only earn a 3.5 G.P.A. to be eligible for induction, but must also give service to the University and community. Students in the Honors College are also encouraged to "give back," and two years ago, Steven Spiegel, Joe Weingartner and Rob Levine did just that: suitemates in the Honors College, they established the Earth Action Board and instituted recycling and conservation programs in the residence halls.

Donna has always been interested in social politics, inspired by conversations around the dinner table in East Northport, where she grew up. Her father was president of his union, the I.U.E., and she recalls marching on the picket line with him. "He made me understand the importance of activism and fighting for what you believe is right. My confidence is based on that foundation," she says.

Her mother was a homemaker, raising five children (Donna is the oldest). When the children were grown, she began to work as a teacher's aide. "She always had a personal grace and beauty. I aspired to be like her."

Donna and her husband, Michael Schwartz, professor of sociology at Stony Brook, live in Port Jefferson with their daughters, Julia, 6, and Katherine, 3. If she has any complaint about the hard life has dealt her, it has to do with time management.

"I'm tired a lot of the time!" she admits with a wry laugh. But, on the whole, life is very good. "I'm in a really wonderful position. I love my job, I have lots of flexibility, and I have a husband who shares the responsibilities of raising the children. The way I manage is: we manage. And the kids benefit from that, too."

THE STONY BROOK ANNUAL FUND

Achieving A New Degree of Excellence

Under the leadership of Annual Fund Chair Denise Logan-Heuser '77, '80, the 1993-94 Annual Fund Campaign raised more than $500,000 in gifts and pledges for the university, helping bridge the gap between what state and tuition revenues provide and what the university's mission of excellence demands.

Gifts to the Annual Fund from alumni, parents of undergraduate students, faculty, and staff support student scholarships, campus enhancements, and enrichment of student life. While state funds are restricted for special purposes, unrestricted gifts to the Annual Fund are crucial to the university, allowing USB to direct the funds wherever campus needs are greatest.

Our sincere appreciation and heartfelt thanks to all who supported the Annual Fund and the University at Stony Brook this year.

Note: Throughout the Alumni List you will find brief portraits of Honors College students, past and present. Honors College students are chosen on the basis of a high school average of 92 or higher, combined SAT scores of at least 1200, and excellence in visual, performing, or literary arts; leadership; or participation in special extracurricular activities or honor programs. Transfer students must have a 3.5 grade point average based on their first three semesters of college.

The Honors College is a special academic program that challenges, stimulates, and enriches exceptional students by providing them with a unique curriculum, close faculty guidance, cultural activities, a supportive social environment, and the opportunity to shape a scholarly community.

About the Stony Brook Foundation

The Stony Brook Foundation, Inc. is a not-for-profit corporation (501[c][3]) established in 1965 as the sole official fund-raising and private gift receiving agency for the University at Stony Brook.

An elected board of directors made up of business, professional, and community leaders manages the funds received by the Foundation. These funds support every aspect of university endeavor: research, education, public service, faculty and student development, economic and cultural development, and health care. In addition, the Foundation provides a corporate entity to support new initiatives at the university such as the Incubator Project.

Working closely with the Office of University Affairs, the Foundation receives gifts of cash, securities, and real and personal property, and deferred gifts such as bequests, life insurance, and life income agreements to support many programs.

Several self-governing support groups, each dedicated to a different aspect of campus activity, come under the Foundation's umbrella. These groups, which enhance the university's development efforts and enrich campus life, currently include the Alumni Association, Center for Industrial Cooperation, Center for Italian Studies, Society for Korean Studies, Friends of Japanese Studies at Stony Brook, Friends of the Staller Center, Industrial Partnership Program, Marine Sciences Associates, Museum of Long Island Natural Sciences, Seawolves Club, University Hospital Auxiliary, and the Volunteer Firefighters Burn Center Fund.
