"COASTAL DESSERTS" ON MENU: Area residents are lining up for a new series of evening dessert-and-discussion sessions about the environment hosted by the University at Stony Brook's Marine Sciences Research Center.

Each session, led by an expert on the topic under discussion, is held from 7:30-9:30 p.m., in Room 120 Endeavour Hall on the Stony Brook campus. The admission fee of $10 per person or $15 for two people includes coffee, tea and an array of desserts. On November 1, the subject will be "Fish and Fisheries: Too Few Fish Or Too Many Fishers?" The series concludes on November 15 with a session on "Developing A Management Plan For A Local Long Island Harbor: Stony Brook Harbor As A Case Study." For more information, call 632-8700.

DISTINGUISHED LECTURE SERIES STARTS OCTOBER 17: The University at Stony Brook launches its 1994-95 Distinguished Lecture Series Monday, October 17 with a presentation by Samuel Betances, professor of sociology at Northeastern Illinois University on "Using Humor to Promote Multicultural Understanding." The program begins at 8 p.m. in the Recital Hall of the Staller Center for the Arts. The talk is sponsored by the Office of the Provost and is part of the celebration of Hispanic Heritage Month.

Dr. Betances (Doctor of Education, Harvard) is a specialist in race relations, gender issues, workforce diversity, and the U.S. Latino experience. His own roots are bilingual and bicultural. For the past 20 years he has been on the faculty at Northeastern Illinois University. He has lectured and published extensively on demographic and social changes and the impact of the global economy on group relations in the United States, hosted his own television show in Chicago and appeared on the Phil Donahue and Oprah Winfrey shows.

The lectures are free and open to the public. For information, call 632-7005.

WINE AND DINE TIME: Fine wine, good food, and philanthropy go together like champagne and caviar. If you want proof, come to the University at Stony Brook on Thursday, November 17, for the fifth annual "Autumn Evening's Wine and Food Tasting." With gourmet food and exquisite desserts from distinguished regional food purveyors and a selection of the best wines from Long Island, California, France and other noted wine regions, November 17 will be an evening to remember.

This year, the Campus and Community Committee for Undergraduate Scholarships expects the event to uncork as much as $60,000 to help undergraduates at Stony Brook pay for their education. Scholarships range from $1,000 to full tuition awards for four years. Approximately half the revenue will be generated by the sale of 1,000 tickets at $40 each. The remainder will come from an 8 p.m. wine auction, one of the biggest of its kind in the Northeast. For ticket information, contact Michael McHale at 632-6873.

WATER WHIZ TO LOOK AT WEST MEADOW CREEK: Dr. R. Lawrence Swanson, director of the Waste Management Institute at the University at Stony Brook's Marine Sciences Research Center, will lecture on "Water Quality at West Meadow Creek: Is it Safe to Swim and Eat Shellfish?" on Thursday, October 20. His talk will be held at 7:30 p.m., in the Stony Brook Community Fund's Marine Conservation Center on West Meadow Road in Stony Brook.

Dr. Swanson will detail the results of a five-year monitoring study of West Meadow Creek. After the hour lecture, there will be a roundtable discussion and coffee break. Admission is $10. For more information or directions to the Marine Conservation Center, call the Stony Brook Community Fund at 751-2244, or call the Marine Sciences Research Center at 632-8676.

HANDS-ON LESSON: Instructor Nancy Morvillo (center) looks on as Ray Naumann (left) and Mary Joy Vitulli of Interger, a Westchester-based biopharmaceutical firm, get some hands-on experience in preparation of a test tube for DNA analysis at the university's Biotechnology Teaching Laboratory. The lab, one of only two DNA teaching facilities on Long Island, has just introduced instructional programs geared to the needs of the region's business and manufacturing community. For the past two years, the Lab has been offering similar programs for students and teachers in the region's public schools.

Sociologist Sees More Research In Wake Of Landmark Sex Study

Stony Brook sociology professor John Gagnon is finding out what it's like being at the center of a media feeding frenzy.

"I've been on the Today Show, 20/20 and interviewed for national magazines and newspapers," says Dr. Gagnon of the whirlwind publicity tour accompanying publication of two new books based on a landmark study he conducted with colleagues at the University of Chicago. The study is the most comprehensive survey of American sexual habits ever undertaken.

The books — Sex in America, written by Dr. Gagnon, Professors Robert T. Michael and Edwin O. Laumann of the University of Chicago and New York Times science reporter Gina Kolata, and a more scholarly treatise, The Social Organization of Sexuality written by Drs. Gagnon, Michael, Laumann and University of Chicago researcher Stuart Michaels — hit the bookstores this month, bringing the authors instant media fame.

Their conclusions — that Americans are more sexually conservative than people think — hit a public nerve. "Many people feel reassured that their lives don't fall off the charts," Dr. Gagnon says.

Among their revelations:

- Partners. Americans have sex about once a week, but a third of adult Americans have sex a few times a year or not at all.
- Marriage. Almost all Americans marry, and 75 percent of married men and 85 percent of married women say they have remained faithful.
- Homosexuality. Five percent of men and four percent of women report having a homosexual relationship as an adult, while 2.8 percent of men and 1.5 percent of women say they are homosexual or bisexual.

- Abortion. Seventy-two percent of women who had abortions had only one, and young teens are most likely to abort a pregnancy.

- AIDS. AIDS and HIV infection are likely to remain largely confined to gay men and intravenous drug users, their sexual partners and their children, and are unlikely to become epidemic in the general population.

The study, sponsored by private foundations, grew out of a proposal in 1987 to gather reliable data on adult sexuality in response to national concern about the spread of AIDS.

"We demonstrated that you can do scientifically competent work on sexuality," Dr. Gagnon says. "Our success will be that there will be more research by other people now that we've established a substantial tradition of work. This is not the end of the story."

■ User-Friendly Computer Music
■ How East and West View One Another
■ Poetry Readings
■ If It Ain't Baroque...

Open your ears and your mind to the challenge of the newest of new music, presented by the Computer Music Studio on Sunday, October 23, at 7 p.m. in the Recital Hall of the Staller Center for the Arts.

Visiting composer Robin Berger's joyous and moving Concertino for piano and tape will be performed by guest artist Mariko Sato. James Moberley's powerful BEAMS! for trombone and computer sounds will feature doctoral candidate Julie Josephson on the horn. Chinese composer (and Stony Brook graduate student) Yuanlin Chen's operatic Jing Yun will include a solo violinist and computer sounds. Also on the program is Steven David Beck's Sirens, a taped work.

Michael Lowenstern will play a double role in the concert. He will perform the bass clarinet solo for Computer Music Director Dan Weymouth's sly and surprising Rare Events, to the accompaniment of computer sounds; and he will present and perform in his own composition, the evocative Pushing Up Daisies, for electronic wind instrument and interactive electronics.

Admission to the concert is free. For more information, call the Department of Music at 632-7330.

If you'd like an advance taste of the concert, stop by the Computer Music Studio's table at the Long Island Technology Fair in the Indoor Sports Complex on Saturday, October 22, from 10 a.m.-6 p.m. You'll have a chance to try the interactive computer music programs and listen to works scheduled for Sunday's performance.

"Research Journeys Through Literature and Culture: Western Views of Easterners/Eastern Views of Westerners" is the topic Distinguished Teaching Professor of Theatre Arts Rose Zimbaro will address on Thursday, October 27, at 4 p.m. in Physics S-240.

This is the second talk of the Undergraduate Colloquium Series on Exploring Research Frontiers. It is open to all members of the university community. Refreshments will be served.

Dr. Zimbaro will focus on the concept of the "Other" in the early modern period, comparing how Eastern culture is viewed by Westerners and how Western culture is seen by Easterners. Reflecting her current research at the Huntington Library in Pasadena, California, the talk will consider race as a social construction and examine a cluster of negative themes (ignorance, violence and sexual promiscuity) that dominant cultures tend to apply to those they dominate.

The next lecture in this series will be on November 17 by Professor of Technology and Society David Ferguson. He will discuss "Computers and Knowledge Engineering: The Architecture and Maintenance of Models of Human Expertise."

Stony Brook's Poetry Center announces its fall lineup of readings, which will take place at 8 p.m. in the Poetry Center, Room 239 of the Humanities Building. The presentations, each featuring two poets, are free and open to the public.

- Thursday, October 20, Ray Freed and Graham Everett will read from their work.
- Wednesday, October 26, Marilyn Chin and Kimiko Hahn will read from their work.
- Wednesday, November 2, Agha Shahid Ali and Siv Cedering will read from their work.

Additional readings will be held on November 9, 16 and 30 and December 7. For further information, call 516-632-7463 or 516-632-7400.

Vocalist Sarah Pillow and harpist Jan Walters will present a program of 17th century English and Italian music on Sunday, October 30, at 3 p.m. in the University at Stony Brook's Staller Center for the Arts Recital Hall. The concert, part of the Baroque Sundays at Three series, is free and open to the public.

The program will feature music by William Lawes, Henry Purcell, Monteverdi, Carissimi, Rossi and Caccini performed on a rare 17th century Italian triple harp and sung by a soprano soloist.

The next concert in the series will be on November 20, when the Stony Brook Baroque Players perform in the Recital Hall.

For further information, call the Department of Music at 632-7330.

UNIVERSITY MEDICAL CENTER AT STONY BROOK

University Medical Center offers low-cost mammograms on October 19

October is National Breast Cancer Month and, slowly but surely, we're getting some good news about breast cancer.

In the last few years local activists have drawn attention to the fact that women on Long Island seem particularly affected by the disease. This attention has focused not only on improving treatment and diagnosis, but also on the urgent need for early detection—especially urgent now that more and more women are being diagnosed in their 30's and early 40's. These relatively early diagnoses have led to the realization that breast cancer is no longer a disease only of post-menopausal women.

Toward that end, the American College of Radiology has declared Wednesday, October 19, "National Mammography Day." On that day, University Medical Center is offering screening mammograms at the low cost of $40. To see if you are eligible or to arrange an appointment, please call 444-7715.

STARTING TIME: University President Shirley Strum Kenny cuts the ribbon to start the October 8 "Walk for Beauty in a Beautiful Place" 6K walk through Stony Brook Village to raise funds for a University Medical Center boutique for women who have had cancer. More than 400 people came to support the walk—which raised several thousand dollars—among them (from left): Gloria Rocchio, President of the Stony Brook Community Fund; County Legislator Nora Bredes; Assemblyman Steve Englebright and Joan Hudson of Suffolk County Women's Services.

University Medical Center is a proud sponsor of the American Cancer Society's "Making Strides Against Breast Cancer" annual 10K walk. It will take place this Sunday, October 16, at 10 a.m. in Nassau County's Eisenhower Park.

If you would like to join the University Medical Center team in "Making Strides Against Breast Cancer," please call 444-7880. Please note: We'll even help with transportation!
