News is presented to the public to educate ourselves, including newspapers, magazines, television programs and the internet. With all of these news-gathering alternatives, it is critical that each of us understand what we are reading and judging their credibility. The news consumer can accurately determine what information should be taken, and what should be discarded or ignored and controlled. (There is a great news story to be followed and used while analyzing the news because it determines which news source to follow. Be aware of taking notes on the article about the news because it is important to know for general literacy & literacy in the news and general literacy)

Which candidate got higher grades at Yale?

 "Does anyone in America doubt that Kerry has a higher IQ than Bush? I'm sure the candidates' SATs and college transcripts would put Kerry far ahead."
Howard Kanes
- Former Executive Editor of the New York Times
- "The Daily Factor"
Washington Post, August 21, 2004

USA TODAY
6/10/2005

In fact, Bush's were a tad higher: His four-year average was 77; Kerry's 76. Both were C students. Kerry graduated from Yale in 1966; Bush in 1968.

Even in the U.S. Many offer training school applications. During the campaign, Kerry refused to waive privacy restrictions for the full file, but gave the Navy permission to release the documents last month, the Globe reported.

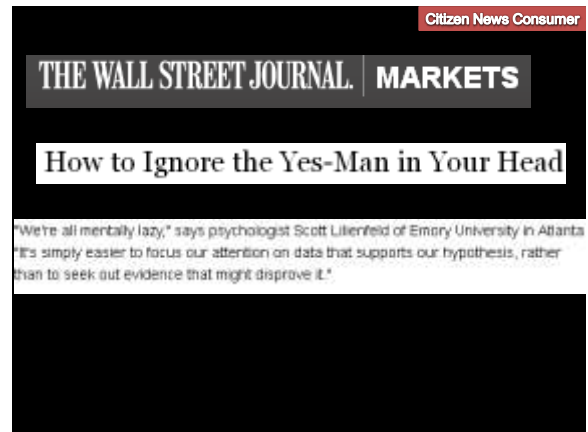

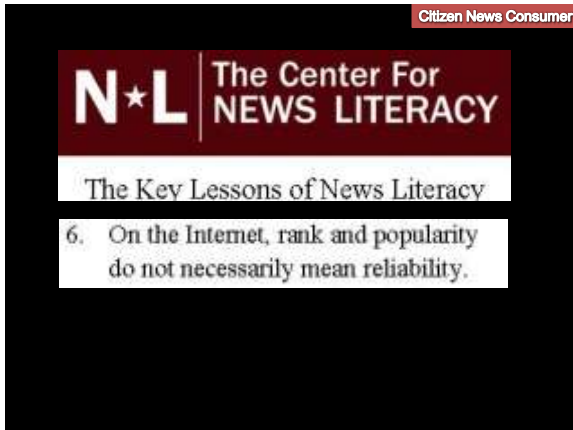

The transcript showed that he got four Cs in his freshman year. Bush received one D in his four years, in astronomy. At the time, Yale considered grades between Ts and Ts a C and Ds to Bs a D.
